5 Dresses and $25,000 Round Trips to Europe Counting the Ethiopians No More Fences

By Arthur Brisbane

New York police arrested a middle-aged woman, begging near a church and "acting strangely." She wore men's shoes, five dresses, one over the other, and carried bankbooks showing deposits of $25,000.

This should not discourage wise charity. Not every old woman, begging, has four extra dresses and $25,000. But it might well discourage indiscriminate, thoughtless giving, which encourages professional beggary and causes young beggars to graduate as criminals.

Sir Hubert Wilkins, who has flown in the Arctic, Antarctic and other queer regions by plane, crossed the Atlantic by dirigible recently.

Says Sir Hubert:

"From almost anywhere in the United States, a business man could spend Wednesday and Thursday going about his business, catch the dirigible by airplane Thursday midnight, spend two business days in Europe, and be at his desk the early part of the next week."

Three airships like the Hindenburg would do the job. Later you will read, and take for granted, such a statement as this:

"Leave Chicago by our luxurious liners at 6 a. m., lunch and shop in Paris, dine in London that same day, returning home in time for business next morning."

Many now living will make such trips. It is a pity that this nation, possessing a monopoly of the only safe gas, helium, lacks the energy, courage, skill or enterprise to build dirigibles and make them stay up.

It ought to be done, if only as "good politics," giving the Stars and Stripes an airing, instead of letting the Swastika monopolize the Atlantic.

Following an old Roman custom, Mussolini is taking a census of the Ethiopians that remain. The total number is between six and fourteen millions. Exact figures are wanted.

The able-bodied will be apt to work—ploughs, spades and shovels supplied by Mussolini—with Italians telling the Ethiopians where and what to dig. That need not horrify us, for it is what we have been doing in this country for a long time. It will be better for the Ethiopians than killing and selling each other into slavery.

Uncle Sam's gold system pleases criminals with stolen gold, watches, rings and other jewelry for sale. Formerly the thief went to the pawnshop, that "last" little, or he applied to the professional "fence," receiver of stolen goods, of whom "Mother" Mandelbaum was the type in the good old days.

No need of any Mother Mandelbaum now. The thief takes his gold to an "old gold dealer," who pays a regulation price, then turns the loot over to the government to be buried in a hole in the ground, "just in case airplanes or racketeers should try to take it from us."

Foreign governments seem able to manage public ownership of important necessities. The fastest railroad trains on earth run on government owned railroads in France and Germany, although it is hoped that H. A. Harriman will change that. His father was a great railroad man.

The Canadian Pacific Railroad continues building great ocean fleet. A new 42,500-ton steamer is ordered, sister to the Empress of Britain, and three other 20,000-ton ships will be built.

Our commercial navy is a fleet. We got one big ship from Germany, named it Leviathan, and then found we could not run it.

What is the matter with us? Can we do nothing but ivy taxes to feed the idle? And when the tax-well dries up, what shall we do?

Hitler beats us in the air, little Canada makes us ridiculous on the ocean. The United States was not always like that.

When he gets around to it, Mussolini, who believes in appeals to the people, will have the Italian king crowned Emperor of Ethiopia. He hopes that Pope Pius will consent to put the imperial crown on the king's head, to make it seem more real.

A former Pope crowned another Italian, from Corsica, "Emperor of the French," or at least he consented to do so. At the last moment, it is said, Napoleon seized the crown and crowned himself, remarking that as he had won the crown he personally would put it on.

Those supposed to interpret Vatican wisdom, do not believe the Pope would oblige Mussolini if it should mean antagonizing the whole League of Nations.

Gov. Curley Wrong on Judge Ouster Plan, Bench Charges

TEST ILLEGAL, 7 JURISTS REPORT

Governor Curley has no authority to require answers from judges on their ages and mental and physical conditions, seven justices of Supreme Court flatly told the governor today.

Their opinion was given the governor in a letter received just before he and the joint legislative committee on judiciary conferred relative to judges' retirement legislation.

In this conference, the governor and Representative Martin Hays of Brighton, committee members and Republican floor leader of the House, clashed over the matter of admitting the press, and Hays was invited to leave if he did not like the way proceedings were being conducted.

The brief conference with the legislative committee was marked by a warning by the governor that he will seek a referendum from the voters on the question of popular election of judges if the Legislature

WOMAN DIVES IN POND TO SAVE BABY

An East Weymouth woman saved a two-year-old boy from death in Lily Pond, off Lake Shore Park drive today.

The boy, Martin Dunton, 2, and his sister, Dorothy, 4, were playing when they fell into the water. The girl saved herself. The boy, in his struggle, floated away.

Mrs. George M. Ward of Lake Shore Park drive had seen the children pass her house, then heard the screams of the little girl. She raced out to the rescue.

Dorothy, soaking wet, gasped her. Little Martin was floating here down about 30 yards from the shore.

Mrs. Ward plunged in and swam to the boy's side. She towed him to shore, then took his limp body to his home in Intervale road, East Weymouth.

She was met by Mrs. Charles Dunton, the child's mother. The two women worked frantically over the unconscious form while firemen were on the way.

Fire Captain James McCarthy and Fireman Carlton White then worked over the baby with an inhalator and finally brought him back to consciousness.

Dr. John Gallivan of Braintree then took charge. He said the boy would recover. Sister Dorothy suffered slightly from immersion.

'Fireproof' Coal Quiz on Tomorrow

Opening of the Boston Finance Commission's inquiry into sale of alleged "fireproof" coal to city departments has been scheduled for 2:30 p. m. tomorrow, it was announced today.

The hearing will take place at the city council chamber. The opening had been scheduled for the morning, but another committee was meeting then.

That committee is one called by Mayor Mansfield to consider ways and means to provide a city milk fund similar to the one in New York.

Although showers were predicted, the sun was blazing out of an almost cloudless sky, indicating the May 18 record of 90 degrees might be surpassed before rain came.

The record of 90 for this date has stood for 47 years. The hottest previous day this year, was May 8—82 degrees.

The mercury shot upward with great rapidity during the forenoon, and the humidity was above normal.

The highest mark on Sunday was 72, after the cold snap had come to a sudden and unexpected end.

STOCKS MIXED

New York, May 18 (AP)—A two-minded stock market today pushed up a few utilities and specialties, while withdrawing support from a number of recent leaders.

Traders appeared to be in a waiting mood, the majority doing little or nothing. Restricted activity was the rule during the greater part of the session.

Saltonstall Ill, Works Probe Halts

Speaker of the House Leverett Saltonstall is ill at his home, it was revealed today at the State House.

Announcement of the speaker's illness was made as the continued hearing scheduled for today before the House Rules Committee on the order of Representative Albert F. Bigelow for a probe of Public Works Department expenditures was postponed.

This order calls for appointment of a special committee of nine House members to conduct the investigation.

18 Spanish Officers Held

Madrid, May 18 (AP)—Eighteen stubborn cavalry officers were reported arrested today for refusing to move their troops. The officers were in command of a regiment involved in an incident at Alcala De Henares.

COAL ACT ILLEGAL, HIGH COURT RULES

The New Deal lost in two sweeping court decisions today.

The Guffey soft coal act—the so-called "Little NRA"—was declared unconstitutional by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Earlier the District of Columbia Court of Appeals in a sweeping opinion ruled the government's $4,800,000,000 relief act is illegal.

Huge Jobs Act Ruled Illegal

Washington, May 18 (AP)—The 1935 relief act was held unconstitutional today by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.

In a sweeping opinion three of the five judges said the $4,880,000,000 law was void because of improper delegation of powers to the President, invasion of state's rights and a lack of definite authorization.

The court said the law "attempts to reach and control matters over which the Constitution has given Congress no powers."

In the test case which resulted from plans for a model community at Franklin, Somerset County, N. J., the Appellate Court found there was no constitutional power "conferred upon the Federal government to regulate 'housing or to 'resettle' population."

"DEAL" TO APPEAL

New Deal officials conferred about future procedure both on relief policy and in the courts.

Solicitor General Stanley Reed said an appeal would be taken to the Supreme Court at once.

He told newspapermen after a hurried reading of the opinion he believed it was "narrow" and confined to construction projects for shifting population under the resettlement administration.

"I am not trying to minimize

New Deal Coal Act Illegal

Washington, May 18 (INS)—The Supreme Court today swept the Guffey coal law, the administration's "little NRA" for the bituminous coal industry, into the oblivion of unconstitutionality.

The high court found that the elaborate system of governmental regulation for the industry far exceeded the constitutional authority granted in the nation's fundamental law.

Again the high court was divided in passing on one of the more important of New Deal measures.

Justices Brandeis, Cardozo and Stone dissented. Chief Justice Hughes, in a separate opinion, asserted that the act should be upheld so far as it affects provisions for marketing in interstate commerce.

Baby Swallows Open Safety Pin

Surgeons at City Hospital will today operate on Frank Herrick, 9 months old, who swallowed an open safety pin.

LANDON'S TALK GOES ON AIR TONIGHT

Topeka, Kas., May 18 (U3)—In probably his last speech before the Republican national convention, Governor Alf M. Landon will deliver the commencement address this evening before the graduating class of the Attica, Kas., high school.

A national NBC hookup will carry his words to the entire country between 8 and 8:30 p. m. Central Standard time.

In Boston and vicinity the speech may be heard over WBZ-WBZA at 10 to 10:30 p. m.

ADDRESS TO YOUTH

The governor has announced that his speech will be addressed to youth and that it will be non-political in character.

Landon, a strong possibility for the Republican presidential nomination, agreed to come to this little village of only 736 inhabitants after he previously had turned down speaking engagements in virtually all the major cities of the country.

He accepted the invitation of George Crowell, Attica lumber man and a former class mate at the University of Kansas.

Crowell's 17-year-old son, Ward, is a member of the graduating class.

BIDS TO JUBILEE

The governor will board a plane at the Topeka airport for Wichita at noon today.

At Wichita he will post for airmail delivery letters to state and local officials throughout the country inviting them to attend Kansas' diamond jubilee exposition at Wichita next fall.

He will proceed to Attica by automobile from Wichita, arriving in the Kansas hamlet about 5 p. m.

The commencement exercises are scheduled to be held outdoors on the athletic field. A crowd of approximately 2000, including delegations from nearby Oklahoma and Kansas towns, is expected to hear the Kansas governor.

ITALIAN FIRING SQUADS IN ADDIS EXECUTE BANDITS

STERN MEASURES IN DRIVE TO STOP LOOTING, RIOTING

By EDWARD J. NEIL

(Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press)

Addis Ababa, May 17—(By military plane to Asmara, Eritrea, May 18)—Murderers caught in the act of killing and looting, plunderers found prowling and bandits who refused to give up arms in accordance with a martial law proclamation have been executed after trials in the last few days as Italian authorities sought to calm the situation in this former Ethiopian capital.

After waiting a week for the scene to quiet itself, but with few sporadic outbursts still prevalent, the authorities are following military law to the letter with fantastic scenes resulting.

Several journalists have left Addis Ababa under compulsion, taking the train to Djibouti, French Somaliland, and more will follow.

As a result of the decisions of military tribunals, rifles and machine guns of carabinieri are banging out sometimes at dusk, carrying out sentence of death for the marauders who burned and pillaged Addis Ababa in four days of rioting, resulting in more than 800 native deaths, before the Italians arrived May 5.

BEFORE FIRING SQUAD

I witnessed a solitary execution in the darkness of the compound behind the carabinieri headquarters near the Menelek monument last night as a shifta (bandit) chieftain, caught in an attack on a farmhouse 20 miles north of here, was brought in and executed after a trial in which members of his own band testified to his guilt.

It was an austere, quiet group in the bare room of the commissariat as the judge heard the evidence and pronounced his decision of death.

Then, in the darkness, the shifta marched out to a whitewashed wall across the small courtyard of the compound.

His was tall and thin, with bushy hair and a bare face, wearing a shama grey with dirt.

He said nothing and seemed rather uninterested as the carabinieri bound his hands behind him and turned his face to the wall. He stood there while the carabinieri lined up 20 feet away.

At the command of fire, a volley into the back crumbled him to the ground.

LAW OF THE STRONG

In accordance with the custom of military execution, a lieutenant fired a pistol in the Shifta's head to make death certain.

An officer who had done long service in the colonies said the Italians waited a considerable time for the situation to clear of itself, but, when the Shiftas continued raiding and retaining guns, the Italians had no choice but to invoke martial law under the penalties announced in a proclamation by Marshal Pietro Badoglio.

"For 3000 years these people have known only the law of the strong despoiling the weak, the armed plundering the unarmed," the officer said. "There is no other choice if order is to be finally restored and law established."

New French Regime Backs Britain, Seeks Arms Parley

Paris, May 18 (AP)—Leon Blum, premier-designate of the incoming "People's Front" government, has asked British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden to join him in calling a disarmament conference, the foreign affairs expert Pertinax reported today.

Writing in the newspaper Echo De Paris, Pertinax said Blum proposed that Germany be invited to such a parley in an effort to give the Reich a legitimate military strength in proportion to its status among the world powers.

Pertinax said the French Socialist leader agreed also to take no initiative in the Ethiopian controversy, but to follow London's lead in its attitude toward sanctions and Italy's annexation of conquered East African territories.

Blum conferred Friday with Eden.

British Cabinet Tackles German, Italian Problems

London, May 18 (AP)—The British cabinet inaugurated today a series of special sessions at which the problems of what to do about Germany's occupation of the Rhineland and Italy's conquest of Ethiopia were expected to be discussed.

The first meeting was called for No. 10 Downing street after Britain had submitted its questionnaire to Adolf Hitler on his future intentions and the League of Nations council postponed consideration of the Ethiopian question until June.

Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden gave a special report on his conversations with statesmen at Geneva and Paris.

BUDGET EXPOSE LOOMS

Particular interest centered on the sessions in view of a widely-expressed belief that some form of cabinet re-shuffle is imminent.

Britain's taxpayers looked for further sensational disclosures as the judicial inquiry into reports of a budget "leakage" entered its second week with several prominent witnesses still to be heard.

Sir Alfred Butt, alleged to have taken out $20,000 insurance against an increase in income and tax taxes and to have had negotiations conducted on his behalf the very day the budget was announced in Commons, was called to the stand.

The colonial office doorkeeper, William M. Robinson, testified last week Sir Alfred, a wealthy member of parliament, theater and racehorse owner, visited J. H. Thomas, colonial secretary, after the budget was disclosed to the cabinet and before it was made public.

NEW LAW URGED

The doorkeeper insisted, however, there was no discussion between them.

Sir Alfred will be followed to the stand by his son, Kenneth Butt.

Whether Neville Chamberlain will give evidence has not been determined, but the Chancellor of the Exchequer was being urged in Commons to introduce legislation making insurance against taxation changes illegal, as "contrary to public policy."

Governor Landon's Principles DEEDS, NOT WORDS

MR. KALTENBORN: Governor, if you should be nominated, will you make a real fighting campaign?

GOVERNOR LANDON: Well, that all depends on how you judge a man. Some people judge a man by the amount of talking he does. Other people judge him by what he gets done.

All my life I have divided people into two classes. One, the people who do things; the other, the people who talk about doing things, and I have tried to keep out of the latter class.

As to a fighting campaign, you never can tell how a horse will work until you hitch him up.—From Mr. Kaltenborn's radio interview with Governor Landon, of Kansas, on May 8.

THE HOMELY but luminous phrasing, the metaphor of the horse and the whole accent of this answer of Governor Landon to Mr. Kaltenborn's question will genuinely recall to the reader the logic and phraseology of another plain American who came out of the West to serve and save his country in time of need—ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Governor Landon is a man of simplicity, sincerity and successful achievement. He is not a man of empty promises but of actual performance. He has DONE big things in Kansas with a minimum of public palaver.

He has DONE them by saying very little, never promising more than he knew he could do, and by ACTION.

Words consume time and energy. In the Kansas Governor's philosophy only DEEDS count.

He divides the people he knows into two classes—those who ACCOMPLISH things and those who TALK about doing things.

NOW, THESE principles are diametrically opposed to those people — WHOM WE ALL KNOW — who talk about doing certain things, such as cutting the national debt and lopping off unnecessary bureaus and commissions, while they are CANDIDATES and then repudiate all their promises AFTER ELECTION.

It is inconceivable that a man of Governor Landon's honesty and forthright expression could ever repudiate a platform on which he was elected.

That is because he wears no mask, nor does he promise vast estates in Utopia, or to every tap-dancer a job.

GOVERNOR LANDON will be nominated at the Cleveland Convention because HE MEANS PRECISELY WHAT HE SAYS, AND HE NEVER SAYS MORE THAN HE MEANS.

And he will be ELECTED PRESIDENT next November because the country is tired of listening to men WHO NEITHER SAY WHAT THEY MEAN NOR MEAN WHAT THEY SAY—BEFORE OR AFTER ELECTION.

GENERAL SHERBURNE SEEN NEW STATE G. O. P. HEAD

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

General John H. Sherburne, one of the best known Republicans of the state, and an early supporter of the presidential candidacy of Governor Alf M. Landon of Kansas, is being seriously considered for the position of chairman of the Republican State Committee.

The real leaders of the party, convinced that the G. O. P. must be completely reorganized here in the interest of success in the state election next November, have been casting their eyes around the state for a fighting man who knows the game from the practical end, for the state campaign key position.

General Sherburne is one of those looked upon as filling the bill. Others prominently mentioned for the position include former Senator Eben S. Draper, the Widow Draper and former Atty. Gen. Jay R. Benton.

UNDERCOVER CAMPAIGN

Congressman Joseph Martin of North Attleboro, one of the best known and influential members of his party in Washington, in the reorganization, is slated to succeed John Richardson of Canton.

The necessary support to secure his selection by the Massachusetts delegation to the national convention at Cleveland, it is understood, has been secured despite an undercover campaign being conducted in uating class.

the interest of Cecil Frazier of Cambridge.

Mrs. Margaret A. Green of Holyoke, supported by Mrs. Mary Bailey of Northampton, and other influential members of the delegation, looms as the successor of Mrs. Mabel R. Batchelder of Worcester, the present national committeewoman.

The necessity for new blood in the key positions is being widely recognized not only among the leaders who desire a militant organization but among the rank and file of the party.

Republican voters are aroused as they have not been for years and have already shown by their big write-in vote for Governor Landon in the Democratic primary that the state organization as it exists.

VICTORY DINNER

Tonight at the Hotel Touraine, Republican members of the legislature are tendering a victory dinner to Representative Charles W. Hodges of Quincy.

Hodges, with Court Clerk George C. P. Dyson of Brockton, were elected by the Republican voters of the 13th district as delegates, to the national convention over a slate headed by National Committeeman John Richardson.

Following the dinner, the legislators will listen in on the address of Governor Landon which will be broadcast over a nation-wide hookup.

Poll Shows Decisive Swing to Gov. Landon

New York, May 18 (US)—As the Republican national convention nears, the popularity of Gov. Alfred M. Landon among the rank and file of the voters continues to grow at a rapid pace.

At the Landon-for-President headquarters here today, representative men on the ballot and public the result of a series of polls taken last week.

In each case the tabulators were asked to record the preference of the first 100 Republicans they encountered. The results overwhelmingly favored Landon.

IDENTICAL RESULTS

On the University of Pennsylvania campus at Philadelphia the straw vote was Landon, 63; Vandenberg, 9; Borah, 25; Knox, 3.

Almost identical returns came from Princeton and Yale. At Princeton the vote was Landon, 84; Hoover, 11; Vandenberg, 12; Borah, 7; Knox, 6; and at Yale, Landon, 63; Borah, 13; Hoover, 12; Vandenberg, 7 and Knox, 5.

In a five and ten cent store at White Plains, the count showed: Landon, 80; Borah, 12; Knox, 4; Vandenberg, 3; Dickinson, 1.

A similar poll at the Polo Grounds grandstand and bleacher entrances gave Landon, 87; Hoover, 7; Borah, 3; and Vandenberg, 2.

SUBWAY COUNT

Other enumerators, working at the subway entrances at Broadway and 42nd street, reported Landon, 81; Borah, 8; Hoover, 5; Vandenberg, 4 and Knox 2.

Landon representatives in other sections of the country have reported to John D. Hamilton, Landon's Washington representative, similar results from polls taken in the same way.

The fast-growing hold Landon has taken on the popular mind is expected to be reflected in the attitude of the delegates when they gather at the national convention in Cleveland next month.

HOFFMAN ISSUE IN N. J. VOTING

Trenton, N. J., May 18 (AP)—Injection of Governor Harold G. Hoffman's intervention in the Hauptmann case as an issue heightened interest today in Tuesday's Presidential preference primary test between forces of Alf M. Landon and William E. Borah.

Counsel for the Hauptmann case his only issue, Franklin W. Fort fought the governor for one of four places as delegate-at-large to the Republican national convention.

O. D. Keep, Fort's campaign manager, charged that although Fort was assured of election, defeat of Hoffman was not sure because of a "deal" between Hoffman and Frank Hague, state Democratic leader, "which calls for the casting by machine Democrats, voting as one-day Republicans, of at least 25,000 'bullet' votes for Hoffman."

Keep called on Republicans to vote for a full slate of four in the field of five, marking their ballots for all but Hoffman, lest one of the noncombatant candidates become the beaten one.

Both Hoffman and Fort are pledged to Landon.

Curly-que

Hongkong, May 18 (AP)—Women's associations of Canton petitioned the authorities today to forbid women curling their hair.

The association's step was, taken, as a demonstration of a desire to cooperate with the provincial government's modesty campaign.

Most Chinese girls have adopted permanent waving—noticeably expanding the beauty parlor industry. And Chinese men are showing a preference for women barbers, 2000 of whom are employed in Canton. As a result, employment of men barbers has been seriously affected.

Meanwhile, the government has slowed down on its dress reform movement. Arrests have ceased.

A Setback for the Grand Snoop

(Reprinted From Chicago Tribune)

SENATOR HUGO BLACK and his associates on the lobby committee—Minton of Indiana, Schwellenbach of Washington, Gibson of Vermont, and Frazier of North Dakota—at last got a bit too strong even for the House of Representatives. An appropriation to make immediately available $10,000 as a special fee for Attorney Crampton Harris of Birmingham, Ala., was voted down by 153 to 137.

Harris is a former law partner of Black. Black wanted him as counsel for the committee defense in the injunction proceedings brought by Mr. Hearst to protect his telegrams and papers from being hooked and netted by the lobby investigators on a fishing expedition. Under the law no employe of an investigatng committee can be paid more than $3600 annually. The fee to Harris was to be a down payment and, as protesting Congressmen said, there was no stipulation that it was to be in full.

THE amount of the fee was not the chief issue in the action taken by the House, although it was the direct one. Members of the House of Representatives must all go into the elections this Fall to retain their seats. They know that Mr. Black and his inquisitors are giving Congress the worst reputation it has had in years. The lobby has been so contemptuous of the constitutional rights of private citizens that it has become notorious as the spearhead of governmental tyranny.

No citizen could safely predict for himself that any privilege and immunity granted him by his laws could be relied upon if the Federal government started out to get him. Although he had imagined himself secure in his person, property, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures, the Black Senators were asserting their right to seize him and all his effects any time they wanted to turn him inside out to discover what, if anything, they could use against him.

The inquisitors had not only tried their own catch-all subpoena processes but they had applied to the Federal Communications Commission to use its authority over the wires and take up millions of private messages.

ALTHOUGH the Senate has some members whom the dragooning of American citizenship must be abhorrent, that body was not disciplining its turbulent and willful members. Only part of the Senate must stand for re-election this year and, moreover, Senators are notoriously tolerant of the misdeeds of their associates. In mutual indulgence the Senators give each other the wildest license.

Inasmuch as Senator Black was bringing odium upon Congress as a whole and arousing in the electorate a justified fear of the entire legislative body, the members of the Lower House would have to stand the gaff and each in his district answer for the usurpations and lawless conduct of the five men in the Senate unless disavowed by him.

If some of the Democratic House leaders hadn't pleaded for gentler treatment of the Senatorial correspondence snatching the vote would have been a more thoroughgoing condemnation of the outfit of swashbucklers and Constitution tramplers.

MR. BLACK has said that the courts are powerless to stop him. That remains to be seen. It is also still an issue in Congress whether his methods shall be indorsed and extended into amendments granting new authority to the Federal Trade Commission to take a similar high hand against any corporation, partnership, or individual it desires to investigate. If the House has anything like a change of heart it will not give Mr. Black's methods root in the growth of the Federal Trade Commission.

MEXICO FACES RAIL STRIKE

Mexico City, May 18 (AP)—Hundreds of American tourists, fearful of being stranded, crowded northbound trains today as 48,000 employes of the Great Mexican National Railways made ready to strike tonight for wage increases.

The general exodus of visitors from the north, making necessary extra cars on all out-going trains, started over the week-end despite a general belief the projected strike would be officially adjudged "illegal" and workers given 24 hours to return to their jobs.

This belief was strengthened after the national revolutionary (government) party newspaper El Nacional, in its leading editorial today, declared flatly the strike call was "entirely illegal," economically unjustified and an outgrowth of "irresponsible" labor leadership.

Boon-Doggle

The 454 citizens of Walsh, Col, cannot, of course, spend all of their time on the new municipal golf links that the Federal Government proposes to build for them. Occasionally they must drop around to see the tax collector or some other local official.

In order that this duty may be performed as pleasantly as possible the Works Progress Administration has approved another project calling for the expenditure of $10,564 in the construction of a new City Hall with a council room, two rest rooms, offices and a Community Hall.

LOVE TRIAL IN FOURTH DAY

Repeated denial of indiscreet relations with the late husband of Mrs. M. Vivian Peirce of Hingham, who brought $10,000 alienation of affection suit against her, was made by Miss Josephine Lagerquist of Brookline in Dedham court today.

The trial entered its fourth day today and evidence is expected to close this afternoon.

Asked if she ever spent the night at Mr. Peirce's home, Miss Laderquist exclaimed:

"No, never!"

She testified that at one time Mr. Peirce gave her a picture of his mother and said to her:

"I know you will reverence it."

She further told the court how during the summer of 1911, she met Mr. Peirce on board boat while returning from Europe.

Tells of 'Nagging'

She said she had noticed unpleasantness between Mr. Peirce and his wife, and at one time heard Peirce tell his wife:

"If you don't stop nagging me, I'll throw your trunk overboard."

She admitted that she had gone to New York on a business trip, but denied having stayed at a New York hotel with Pence. She said she spent that night of June 16 at Jersey City, N. J.

Last week Mrs. Peirce testified that she had found her husband and Miss Lagerquist in a New York hotel room together.

Asked by her attorney if she had made any attempt to procure the witnesses who had been with her at Jersey City that night, Miss Laderquist said she had but had been unable to locate them.

Miss Minter Sues Brokers For $750,000

Los Angeles, May 18 (AP)—Mary Minter, the golden-haired Co... Baby ... slayer ... n star of 15 years ago, was ... in the courtroom role of a ... stiff today in a $750,000 suit.

The slender ex-star—she dieted away 90 pounds in recent months—is suing Blyth & Co., stock brokers, and their predecessors.

She charges that Leslie B. Henry, now serving a prison sentence for defalcations of bonds and other securities of Miss Minter and her relatives, acted as agent for the firm of Blyth, Witter & Co., with which he was connected at the time.

Aiding Miss Minter are her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, and her sister, Mrs. Margaret Fillmore, against whom she once brought suit for an accounting of more than $200,000.

Joseph Levinson, Miss Minter's attorney, said he is ready to spend two months in trial of the case. Norman Sterry, counsel for the defense, indicated he would contend the arrangement between the Shelbys and Henry was a private one, not involving the brokerage concern.

Miss Minter alleges the defalcations began in 1923, when Henry took $25,000 in bonds belonging to her from a safety deposit box, and continued until the thefts were discovered in 1932.

SENATE BACKS BIG INCOME TAX

Washington, May 18 (AP)—The Treasury estimated today that the latest compromise tax plan of the Senate finance committee would produce $642,000,000 of which $173,000,000 would come from individual income tax payers.

Indicative, however, of the fact that the committee still is groping for an agreement on how to rewrite the tax bill as it passed the House, were requests for additional estimates on other ways of raising the $523,000,000 of permanent revenue sought by the President.

BAKERY DRIVER WEEPS VIEWING SLAIN WIFE

Lawrence, May 18—Cringing and whimpering, but still denying guilt, John Gobush, 35-year-old bakery truck driver, was forced to view the battered body of his wife today in the morgue—the wife he is charged with slaying.

The visit to the morgue was made just before dawn, the body having been returned to Lawrence from an undertaker's in Lowell when the police decided to put Gobush through the ordeal.

He is alleged by police to have beaten Mrs. Vivian Gobush, 27, to death. She died Saturday in Lawrence General Hospital, three hours after being admitted.

She had a fractured skull and her body bore 45 distinct bruises, according to Medical Examiner Victo A. Reed, who said the bruises could have been marks left by the hammering of a shoe, the weapon police contend was used.

Gobush has insisted, even under steady grilling, that his wife suffered her injuries in a fall down stairs in their Alder street home.

After viewing the body, Gobush was grilled for another hour at police headquarters. Police said he was then semi-hysterical and screaming his denials.

Later he was arraigned in district court on the murder charge, and pleaded not guilty. He was held for hearing Friday and was remanded to jail without bail.

Funeral services for Mrs. Gobush will be conducted tomorrow in Lowell.

Building Strike Halts Six Jobs

Striking building laborers on more than a dozen Public Works Administration projects were still firm in their demands for higher wages today.

Aga Khan's Son Weds Britisher

Paris, May 18 (INS)—Prince Aly Khan, son and heir of Aga Khan, noted Indian sportsman and spiritual leader of the Ismaili Moslems, today married Mrs. Loel Guinness, former wife of the Conservative British member of Parliament and member of the famous brewing family.

The couple was married by the mayor of the 16th Arrondissement in Paris in a civil ceremony. A religious ceremony later was performed at a Turkish mosque.

Last June the prince was named correspondent in an undefended divorce suit brought by Guinness against his wife, who was the former Hon. Joan Yarde-Buller, daughter of the late Lord Churston.

Mr. and Mrs. Guinness were married July 4, 1927. They had one son.

Prince Aly Khan will inherit the fabulous wealth and famous racing stables of his father, who is the spiritual head of 100,000,000 Moslems in India and is considered one of the richest men in the world. Like his father, the prince prefers life in the West.

The stork these days seems to be carrying bigger bundles, what with the Nicaraugan sextuplets, the Dionne quintuplets and the Kasper quadruplets. Two girls and a boy, they are (l. to r.), Mary, Richard and Theresa.

BONUS? It's Going 10 WAYS

HOME, CAR LEAD LIST

Out of the coffers of the U. S. Treasury Department on June 15, more than $125,000,000 of bonus money will pour into the waiting hands of 239,938 New England World War veterans.

What is going to be done with this money?

The Boston Evening American, after a canvass of 100 applicants for the bonus, finds that a majority will do these ten things.

1—Make a down payment on a new home or remodel their present one.
2—Buy a new or second hand automobile.
3—Buy a new ice chest; washing machine and electrical equipment for the "Mrs."

Erase Debts

4—Pay off outstanding debts; particularly insurance defaults.
5—Buy a tract of land in the country or at the seashore.
6—Invest their bonus bonds in sound enterprises that will pay them dividends.
7—Place the bonds in their bank and let them draw three-and-a-half per cent interest.
8—Give their sons and daughters an education.
9—Spend their bonus on travel at home and abroad.
10—Buy part interests in businesses where they are presently employed or branch out for themselves.

"Swell Time"

There was one fastidious "vet" who said:

"I've got $1025 coming to me. I'm single and haven't any dependents. Me? I'm going to have a swell time."

Then there was a serious looking chap, with a tinge of grey sprinkled near his temples.

"Since the year 1929, I've taken all sorts of abuse from my boss," he growled. "I've had to take it because of my wife and four children—but—when I get that bonus cash——" he gritted his teeth.

I pity his boss.

Thieves Carry Off Safe With $858

Working stealthily in the hour before dawn, burglars today carried a 200-pound safe containing $858 from a delicatessen at Woodrow and Blue Hill avenues, Mattapan.

Employes found the rear door jimmied when they reported for work, approximately 45 minutes after a patrolman had tested the door.

Marks on the floor indicated that the safe had been dragged from the office, across a back room and into the yard in the rear. Tire marks showed that the thieves used an automobile.

Edward Brundage, of the finger print division of the bureau of records at police headquarters, went to the delicatessen in an attempt to pick up marks for identification.

East Boston Man Dies of Stroke

Cool Justice

Long Beach, Cal., May 18 (AP)—'Twas a fine spring day, and while a jury debated a damage case, Judge Frank G. Swain went for a swim in a lagoon across the street from the court building.

When a bailiff hailed him from the beach, quoth his honor: "The water's fine. Bring them down and I'll receive the verdict."

So, in dripping trunks (instead of the customary black robe, the judge accepted the verdict, dismissed the jury, and resumed his swim.

Baby Plunges To Death in Mattapan

Diagram Shows Baby's Fall

Before the eyes of a number of horrified residents in Lucerne street, Mattapan, a baby boy plunged through a window 40 feet to his death.

The baby, Bentley Herman, 2½-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Herman, of 93 Lucerne street, ha dbeen playing in the kitchen of his home.

His mother, Mrs. Lillian Herman, turned her back on him only for a moment when he leaned against a window screen.

The screen gave away and the boy and screen hurled from the third floor.

The baby was bleeding severely from head injuries. A passing auitoist took the distracted mother and her dying child to Forest Hills Hospital.

There Dr. Francis R. Sullivan had been prepared for an emergency call and he and nurses worked in vain to save the baby.

WIFE'S Age Fooled HIM

WED YEAR OF HIS BIRTH

The court was as flabbergasted as spectators in the divorce session in Cambridge today when a 32-year-old Melrose man testified his wife was "about 60, now," although the age on her marriage certificate was 24.

Walter J. Searles, the petitioner, said he is a sales engineer, lives in West Hill street, and he and Jeanette M. Searles were married January 5, 1924.

"She told me it was her first marriage," Searles testified. "I believed her, but a few months after we were married I found out that she had two children, well grown."

He investigated and learned his wife's first marriage was in 1904, Searles continued, remarking:

"It was the same year I was born. She's about 60 now."

Judge Joseph M. Monahan expressed his astonishment at this. He checked through the wedding certificate. The he said:

Blonde Now

"Why, the age given here is 24. Didn't you have any idea she was more than 24?"

"No, Your Honor," Searles answered. "I didn't know until I found out about the two children and that she had been married before."

At this point Searles' attorney, John Glynn, put in:

"She's a blonde—"

And the petitioner interrupted:

"Yes, but she was a brunette."

Searles also testified his wife and he finally decided to go along together until after her children were grown. He had since helped put them both through high school, he said.

But Mrs. Searles was cruel and nagging, the husband continued, and once she pushed him downstairs, causing him to sprain an ankle.

No Alimony

"How much does she weigh?" asked the court.

"About 123 or 124 pounds."

"You look like a pretty well set up man —"

"I'm 178 pounds, Your Honor, but the push was unexpected."

Searles also said his wife had hit him once with an earthen teapot and that she had "nagged" him many times.

The divorce action was uncontested, Judge Monahan gave Searles a decree and remarked that there should be no alimony.

NEW DEAL 5 BILLION RELIEF LAW INVALID, SAYS COURT

the opinion," he added. "We wanted it the other way."

TUGWELL SILENT

Rexford G. Tugwell, in charge of the resettlement administration, deferred comment pending a study of the opinion. It was written by Associate Justice Van Orsdel and concurred in by Chief Justice Martin and Associate Justice Robb.

The other two members, Justices Groner and Stephens, agreed constitutional authority was lacking in this case, but said the court should not have passed upon validity of the entire program.

The appellate court reversed the ruling of the District of Columbia Supreme Court, which had upheld the validity of the resettlement program and denied an injunction against the New Jersey project sought by a group of taxpayers.

After reviewing provisions of the 1935 relief act which appropriated $4,880,000,000 and the executive orders of President Roosevelt which set up the resettlement agency, Justice Van Orsdel said:

"This is delegation running riot."

NO CURB OVER FUNDS

Referring to opinions of the United States Supreme Court which found NRA, AAA and the original "first aid" control act unconstitutional," Justice Van Orsdel said the same legal flaws were found in the resettlement administration.

"There is nothing in the act directly prescribing the power or duties of the President with respect to housing," he said.

"Assuming that it may be inferred from the act that the funds are to be used by the President, yet there is nothing requiring their use, either absolutely or in any specified condition of circumstance.

"He is free to use them or not, as he sees fit. . . .

"There is no guide as to where or when or how these funds are to be used for housing."

GAVE POWER SUPREME

Condemning the broad powers under the relief act, the court said that in the language of the Supreme Court's NRA decision, the President was "virtually unfettered.

"He is at liberty to set up agencies and prescribe such rules of conduct and fix standards as he may deem proper," said the decision.

After noting the power of the President to transfer amounts to various projects under the relief act, the majority said:

"It logically follows the President and not the Congress is to legislate with respect to housing.

"The President, and the Congress, is to set up governmental agencies to carry out the purposes of the act. The President, not the Congress, is to prescribe the regulations and rules of conduct which shall govern.

"The President, not the Congress, is to decide where and when and how, if at all, this enormous sum of money is to be expended for housing."

Congress was said to have set up "neither path nor program" for the Resettlement Administration.

MUST FIX LIMITS

"Obviously, if the President were so disposed, he could use the entire sum appropriated in building houses exclusively for our colored population or, on the other hand, he could just as well exclude that portion of our population from any benefits whatever.

"The houses for which this vast sum of money is to be spent may be rented or sold, at a profit or a loss.

"They may be constructed in cities where there is no demand, or in the country to create and build a new city in its entirety.

"Indeed, they may be built and left unoccupied."

The court said "this may be said to be mere fancy," but the principle involved was that "in the appropriation of public moneys the congressional mandate shall include a reasonable limitation on the discretion of the executive in their use."

Possible effects of the opinion on the pending relief-deficiency bill was the subject of immediate study by administration leaders.

PERILS NEW RELIEF

Like the $4,880,000,000 relief appropriation of last year, the $1,425,000,000 relief fund now before the Senate appropriations committee would be allotted only by broad classifications.

For "rural rehabilitation and relief to farmers" the measure allotted $85,500,000. President Roosevelt has said the resettlement administration would be continued on a curtailed basis with funds provided by this bill.

Also as in the 1935 act, the pending relief bill would grant the President authority to shift money from one classification to another within a 15 per cent limit.

Announcement of the ruling, which resettlement officials said was a complete surprise to them, found Undersecretary Tugwell in conference with Secretary Wallace.

HITS FOUR PROJECTS

The ruling involved one of four major suburban housing projects started by the Resettlement Administration from an allocation of $30,000,000. These, intended to provide low cost homes for 5000 families, are located at Berwyn Heights, Md., near Washington; at Cincinnati, O., at Milwaukee, Wis., and Bound Brook, N. J.

In addition to these new projects, the administration took over 33 housing projects from the former subsistence homesteads division of the Interior Department. Of these, 18 have been completed and are occupied, while construction is in progress on the remainder.

Officials said they had believed that the projects now under construction might be completed with funds remaining in the present allocations to the administration.

DEPRESSION NOT ENOUGH

However, Tugwell told the Senate finance committee last week the work would have to be halted July 1 if no additional funds were provided.

Quoting opinions of the Supreme Court which killed other New Deal acts, the Appellate Court said the relief act included identical constitutional flaws.

Referring to the act as the "most stupendous single appropriation ever made by a legislative body," the court said the "emergency" of a depression was "not sufficient to expand the power of Congress to tax and spend for purposes exclusively within the reserved powers of the States."

The court said it was necessary to pass upon the entire act in order to determine "whether or not legal authority exists" in the particular relief project.

MANION'S AUTO CRASH PROBED

Registrar of Motor Vehicles Frank A. Goodwin today ordered an investigation of the automobile accident in which Charles E. Manion, former chauffeur to Governor Curley, figured last Friday night.

Manion, who is now supervisor of motor equipment in the State Public Works Department, and John T. O'Dea, Jr., son of Police Captain O'Dea, were in a car which collided with another driven by Attorney Joseph A. Sahagen.

The accident occurred at Clarendon and Chandler streets, South End.

Sahagen, who claimed after the crash that the other men left the scene and reappeared in a police cruising car, is now in Washington and may not return for several weeks, as he had planned to attend the graduation of a niece from the University of Southern California.

James H. Brennan, counsel for Manion, said he would institute a civil suit for personal injury to both Manion and O'Dea, as well as for property damage to the automobile in which they were riding.

Lynn Gas Blast Victim a Suicide

Medical Examiner Nathaniel P. Breed of Lynn announced today that Mrs. Nellie Moroulis, 32, who was found dead in her Essex street home, following an explosion, was a suicide.

Contents of a note, plus the fact that an autopsy determined gas inhalation caused death before the woman's clothing caught fire, led to the suicide conclusion, police said. The note read:

"Boy of mine—Be sure and tell Phil."

The note, according to authorities, was intended for one of Mrs. Moroulis' three children, "Phil," police said, was a Boston man with whom Mrs. Moroulis had been friendly. She was a widow.

Mrs. Moroulis was found seated in the kitchen, a mass of flames, when passersby were attracted by the blast from gas in a combination gas and coal range.

JUDGES RAP CURLEY

does not pass a retirement bill at this session.

CONSIDER BILL

Following the conference, Senator Frank Hurley of Holyoke, Democrat and chairman of the committee, said the committee will consider the governor's recommendation for a 70-year- full-pay retirement bill for judges next week.

"It is most constructive," said Senator Hurley of the governor's plan. "The temper of the people is such that they will no longer countenance the delays which occur in the trial of cases, or delays due in some instances to the fact that superannuated judges are sitting on the bench.

"What we need is a judiciary, the members of which are mentally alert. Some of the members of the bench are not physically capable of doing their work and they should be relieved of the responsibility placed upon them."

SEND MESSAGE

In their letter to the Governor, the seven Supreme Court justices, all of whom signed the messenger-sent missive, said:

"We acknowledge receipt of the several letters under record date from the executive secretary, addressed to the members of this court.

"The letter asks for answers to certain personal questions concerning the members of the court. According to the public press, similar letters have been sent to the judges of all the other courts in the Commonwealth.

"The reference in the letters to Article 58 of the amendments to the Constitution, as to the retiring of judicial officers by the governor and an assumption that authority to require answers to the questions is conferred by that article.

LACKS AUTHORITY

"This assumption compels us to say that in our opinion Article 58 confers no such authority. The provisions of the Constitution establishing the independence of the judicial department of the government puts upon us the duty of stating that answers cannot be made under footing that they are required.

"However, as a matter of courtesy to the chief executive of the Commonwealth, this information is given. The ages of the members of the court, at their last birthdays, were:

"Arthur P. Rugg, 73, on August 20, 1935; John C. Crosby, 76, on June 15, 1935; Edward P. Pierce, 83 on December 28, 1935; Fred T. Field, 59, on December 24, 1935; Charles H. Donahue, 58, on December 7, 1935; Henry T. Lummus, 59, on December 28, 1935; Stanley E. Qua, 55, on August 26, 1935.

"The ages and the present condition of health of the members of the court are such as not to interfere with or prevent proper performance by them of their judicial duties."

PLANS VOTE

At the conference with the legislative committee members, Governor Curley warned that if the Legislature does not pass a judges' retirement law at this session he will set in motion initiative legislation and ask that the people vote on the following points:

The holding of a constitutional convention.

The compulsory retirement of judges at the age of 70.

The retirement of judges at one-half or at full salary.

A fixed term of office for judges.

A popular election of judges.

CURLEY IN CLASH

The conference had been under way only a few minutes when Governor Curley and Representative Hays clashed.

This clash came when the Governor had invited the press to attend the conference.

Representative Hays walked across the room to where Senator Hurley was seated.

"I thought this was to be a private conference, Frank," said Hays.

"The Governor called us here and he is in charge," Senator Hurley replied.

Victim of Bullet Goes Under Knife

Burlington, Vt., May 18—The quarrel which resulted in a shooting at a wedding reception here two days ago meant little today to Eva LaCourse, 24-year-old victim.

Miss LaCourse, who was shot after attending the wedding of a friend, has undergone an emergency operation. Surgeons expressed doubts that their efforts can save her life.

Maurice Pouline, 20, charged with attempted murder, is recovering in another hospital from a shot police say he pumped into his chest after fleeing from his former sweetheart.

STATE HOUSE HUNTS PHANTOM IN THEFTS

Commissioner of Education James G. Reardon disclosed today he has had a private detective working for three months in the State House, seeking a phantom thief who stole papers from his office, in the same way that Governor Curley's office had been looted.

"I expect a report from the detective in three or four days and will make no further statement until that time," Reardon said.

State police detectives are also seeking to solve the mystery.

Coming only a short time after Governor Curley had revealed the disappearance of official papers, Commissioner Reardon's disclosure of thefts from his office caused a sensation at the State House.

"I'm a mighty good marksman," was Governor Curley's comment when he told reporters of the thefts from his office and displayed the automatic which he had secreted in his desk.

The recently appointed head of the state's educational system, apparently not as confident as the Governor of prowess with firearms, indicated that the invasion of his files had merely caused him to utilize a safe in his Wellesley home.

"These papers, which contained important references to traders, could not, after all, have disappeared of their own locomotion," Commissioner Reardon said.

"It follows that they must have been stolen."

"This is nothing new," the Governor declared.

Mr. J. J. Cremmen
Advertising Director
"Boston American"
Boston, Massachusetts

Dear Mr. Cremmen:

It is generally a simple matter to throw brickbats at a newspaper for reasons real or imaginary, but it is quite unusual for an organization to give roses instead.

For a good many years Howard Clothes have used the columns of the "Boston American" for the publication of its advertising message and have found it profitable.

The Howard Clothes business in Boston has continued to grow season after season and this year we are proud to state has been the biggest in our entire history. The reasons for Howard's success are obvious -- the right merchandise backed by the unqualified guarantee of satisfaction, the one low Howard price, and the selection of the proper newspaper to deliver our value message to its value conscious readers.

The service and cooperation you have given us can have but one effect and that is for us to continue to use your paper, even in a bigger way than ever before.

Very truly yours

"TRIPLICATE JIM"
They're calling him—
Wherever you look, you see
Confronting you
Not one, or two Of Triplicate Jim—but Three!

Triplicate Jim!
Though jobs are slim
For people like you and me,
And though conditions
Restrict positions
Triplicate Jim has THREE!

As National Chairman
(Also State)
And Postmaster-General, he
Is a sort of a triplicate potentate,
A singular trinitee!

TO keep your glim
On Triplicate Jim
Is difficult, you'll agree;
To watch ONE Jim
Makes vision swim,
And who can keep track of Three?

Triplicate Jim!
While one of him
Would certainly seem to be
An over-supply,
What greets the eye
Is THREE of him—count 'em—THREE!

Behold the Farley Triumvirate!
National Chairman, (Also State)
And Postmaster-General, he
Is the New Deal's triplicate potentate,
A singular trinitee!

G-MEN PALS TRAPPED DILLINGER AND 'PRETTY-BOY' FLOYD

COWLEY, HOLLIS TRAILED PAIR FOR 2 YEARS

(This is the second in a series of exclusive articles revealing the inside story of the extermination of the nation's public enemies by the "shooting lawyers"—the G-men.)

By WIN BROOKS

Aces of the G-men were Samuel E. Cowley and Herman E. Hollis, close pals.

Cowley set the Dillinger trap, Hollis killed the outlaw when he reached for a gun.

Cowley and Hollis together laid the trap that led to the downfall of Pretty Boy Floyd and they were with Melvin Purvis when Floyd reached the inevitable end of his crooked trail.

But their close association in the drive of the Department of Justice on the nation's public enemies went back much farther than those cases and it was inseperably cemented at the Little Bohemia resort in upper Wisconsin in April of 1934 when the G-men staged their unsuccessful raid on the Dillinger hideout.

Out of that hide, machine gun gibbering, ran George "Baby Face" Nelson, bank robber and one of the newer public enemies, known to the G-men as the armorer of the Dillinger mob.

His fire cut down W. Carter Baum, special agent of the justice department. Baum died, Nelson escaped, as did Dillinger, eluding a posse in the woods.

Wife Captured

She was convicted of harboring Dillinger and John Hamilton, sentenced to jail, soon paroled.

She was really paroled so the G-men could trail her and locate Nelson.

Cowley and Hollis swore to get Baby Face and on the head of the slayer of Baum the government placed a reward of $5000. None of Nelson's pals wished to run the risk of becoming an informer and the reward went for Sweeney.

Hamilton, Dillinger, then Floyd were erased from public enemy list before Cowley and Hollis, working out of Washington under the personal direction of J. Edgar Hoover, had an opportunity to concentrate on Nelson.

Then Mrs. Nelson was turned loose and the trail was picked up.

Nelson had never rejoined the Dillinger gang after his escape in Wisconsin.

With a price on his head, he mutilated his fingerprints with acid. Cowley learned of it.

Nelson was 26 years old and he didn't look very much like a baby.

Jump Ahead

Cowley and Hollis picked up Mrs. Nelson's trail in Chicago and had her under personal surveillance from time to time.

They figured Nelson had a hide in Lake County near Lake Bluff. They couldn't locate it; Mrs. Nelson didn't go there.

Twice they nearly captured him but he was a jump ahead. They obtained his fingerprints, mutilated by the acid. Enough remained so that the Washington bureau was able by its special process to identify them as Nelson's and assure the agents they were on the right trail.

Then Mrs. Nelson managed to drop from sight.

The chase, relentless, became no less discouraging.

On November 27, 1934, by a means which cannot be disclosed, Cowley came into information that Nelson would join his wife in a Chicago suburb near Barrington. The information, while not specific, was reliable.

Cowley and Hollis, in a patrol car of their own, acted as a liaison between the group in ambush.

When Nelson was first sighted, south of Barrington, his wife had already joined him and another man was with him. One group of G-men attempted to halt the Nelson car, fired on it and were outdistanced in a short chase.

Cowley and Hollis picked up the Nelson car on State Road 63, took after it at a 70-mile pace.

At Barrington, near a gasoline station, Nelson swerved his machine into the Northwest highway, slowing down. The G-men, snatching death by the forelock, took a short cut at full speed across a corner lot, drew abreast of the Nelson car, then ahead of it and cut in. A collision was narrowly averted.

Nelson, his wife and their companion leaped out of one car as Cowley and Hollis jumped from the other. Mrs. Nelson rolled into a ditch out of range of the gun battle that immediately opened.

The cars were used for shields. Cowley swung a sub-machine gun, Hollis a sawed-off repeating shotgun. Nelson sprayed lead from a Tommy-gun of his own and his companion had a pistol.

Bullets riddled both machines. The combatants fired through the cars and at legs under them. Apparently no hits were being recorded.

Cowley, noted for his fearlessness, stepped out from behind the government machine in an attempt to get a better shot at Nelson. Baby Face's fire burned through the agent's stomach and he dropped in a ditch, mortally wounded, his own gun still working.

Hollis, to be nearer Cowley, broke from the cover of the car for a tree and also fell, instantly killed.

Cowley fired 50 rounds of machine gun bullets. Hollis fired 12 shells of buckshot. Nelson fired about 100 shots and his companion emptied two pistols.

Calls for Purvis

Their own car incapacitated in the battle, Nelson, his wife and his unidentified companion fled the scene in the G-men's machine.

Every agency of the federal government, plus the merged police forces of suburban Chicago, was thrown into the hunt for Nelson.

Cowley, dying, called for Purvis.

"Nelson," he mumbled, Nelson, Nelson's wife."

"Get Nelson," was the far-flung order that galvanized the coordinated hunt.

But Cowley already had "got Nelson." It developed later that Cowley and Nelson died about the same time, Nelson in the hideaway to which he was sped on the outskirts of Chicago.

The body of Baby Face, containing 17 slugs from the gun of Special Agent Cowley, was found at 9:30 the next morning in the suburb of Niles.

Within 24 hours Nelson's wife was secretly taken into custody in Chicago.

There, while the newspapers carried stories of the widening search for her, she was held incommunicado until December 4.

Gets Life

There, while the headlines screamed the news that the G-men were closing in on her, she confessed to having been with her public enemy husband during the gun fight and named her husband's companion as John Paul Chase, an out-rider of the Dillinger gang.

In reality the hunt that was being pressed and led by Melvin Purvis was the hunt for Chase.

The Department of Justice had Chase's record. He had been a garage man and a bootlegger at Sausalito, Cal., before he took small parts in Dillinger raids.

G-men picked up his trail out of Chicago. It was a hitch-hike trail heading west. They figured, and rightly, that he would return to the Pacific Coast in the vicinity of his home, where he had friends to aid him. Twice between Chicago and California, G-men just missed their quarry.

They caught up with him in Mt. Shasta, Cal., on December 27 and took him without firing a shot.

He was convicted of murder and is now serving a life sentence at Alcatraz.

"I'd rather hang," he said, sourly, when sentence was passed.

Before he entered prison he confessed that he had been a witness to the murder of Roy Frisch, Reno, Nev., banker, and that Baby Face Nelson was the killer.

* * *

When a good man dies in the G-man service, another good man takes his place.

Into the shoes of Special Agent Cowley stepped Special Agent E. J. Connelly, ex-service man, who had worked with Cowley and Hollis on the Dillinger, Floyd and Nelson cases.

Connelly, on a ranging detail with a flying squad, was assigned to "bring in" the members of the Karpis-Baker gang, wanted for the $200,000 ransom kidnaping of Edward G. Bremer, St. Paul banker.

Several already had been dragged by the heels to justice by the G-men but still at large were the leaders, Alvin Karpis and the three Barkers, "Ma" and her sons, Arthur, called "Doc," and Fred.

"We have always felt that the Karpis-Barker mob was the brainiest and most dangerous in the country," G-man Hoover admitted.

Brains of Mob

"As long as it was at large we figured that a kidnaping or a big bank robbery might take place at any time. It roved from the Pacific, across the continent through the middle west and the south."

"Ma" Barker was Mrs. Kate Barker, as kindly looking an old lady as ever cuddled the stock of a sub-machine gun under her chin. She was the real brains of the pilfering mob. She was born and brought up in the Oklahoma bad lands and never had any more respect for the law than a dog has for a "Keep Off" sign. She had a "dead pan mask" she could don at a wink and give a fine take-off on Whistler's "Mother."

Direction pursued by the G-men after the Bremer case was broken, leaders of the gang split and went into hiding, leaving cold trails behind them.

On January 10, last, newspapers carried the word that Russell Gibson, alias Slim Grey, one of the lesser members of the Karpis-Barker gang had been shot dead by G-men during an encounter in Chicago.

The real news, not carried by the papers, was that Arthur "Doc" Barker, a slim, hard-faced, yellow-fingered chain smoker, had been taken alive at the same time.

No mention was made of Barker.

But Barker was in the secret custody of the G-men in Chicago and through his hideout the agents went like ferrets in search of something that would tie them off to the whereabouts of his mother and brother.

They found it—a letter with a disguised address, signed by an assumed name; with that and what they were able to sweat from the snarling "Doc" they headed for Oklawaha, Fla.

"Doc" Barker knew his mother and brother were about to be captured, but he had no way of warning them and they had not even the knowledge that he had been arrested to warn them of their own precarious position.

Connelly took his flying squadron of 12 special agents south with him. They looked like a college football team traveling in three cars, except that their luggage made them appear to be a string orchestra. In the musical instrument cases were sub-machine guns.

Every one of the 12 agents was a lawyer. Every one was a graduate of the federal bureau training school. Half of them were considerably younger than 30.

"T. C. Blackburn" was the phoney name signed to the letter the G-men had seized in "Doc" Barker's hideout.

At Miami they contacted Carson Bradford, president of the Biscayne Kennel Club, and from him made inquiries concerning Mr. Blackburn.

Bradford said:

"To be sure. He is living in my summer home on Lake Weir in Oklawaha. He and his mother, a nice old lady. They have been there two months."

It was 6:45 on the morning of January 16—title of a real life drama—that the Connelly squad surrounded the leased residence of "T. C. Blackburn" and his "nice old mother." Day was just breaking.

Connelly walked to the door with an automatic in his hand. He rapped on the door with the butt of it.

"Who's there?" a snarling voice demanded.

"The Department of Justice," shouted Connelly. "Open up and come out with your hands up."

The answer came immediately. It was a rifle bullet through the door. Connelly, trained not to stand in front of doors, was two feet out of its line.

A moment later a burst of machine gun fire spattered from a second floor window at the end of G-men. They took to cover.

That was the beginning of the most furious gun fight in the records of the Department of Justice.

Fred Barker on the first floor of the house, with rifle and machine gun, "Ma" Barker at a second story window with a machine gun, held off G-men during a pitched battle that lasted six hours.

The house opposite theirs, vacated during the first stages of the battle by Mrs. A. F. Weatherby, and riddled by the fire, was the best vantage point of the G-men.

Bullet by bullet the special agents proceeded to cut the dwelling of the Barkers apart. There was no opportunity to use tear gas; they couldn't get close enough. They fired 1500 rounds of ammunition.

In the G-man squad was a former Texas Ranger, expert rifle shot. Strangely enough, he also is called "Doc."

Connelly detailed him to "get" Fred Barker, who now and again lifted his head above the sill of a first-floor window and let go another spray from a machine gun.

The avenger, marking his opportunity with his rifle trained always on the window, fired three times and three rifle bullets were later found in Fred Barker's head.

Mrs. Lavon Chipman Cowley, widow of Samuel Cowley, the slain G-man. She pays—her children will pay, for the killing of her husband in battle with George "Baby Face" Nelson. It takes little imagination to calculate that often in the mind's eye of this woman made a widow by desperate gangsters, that the picture of Nelson appears.

Ham-Curtis Ceremony Attracts Many Socialites

By BETTY ALDEN

EITHER FANNY CURTIS or Hale Ham is a pretty clever campaign manager . . . for they completely outwitted their practical joking ushers when they started off for their honeymoon Saturday afternoon . . .

All during the reception at the Greely S. Curtis' summer home in Marblehead, the ushers were busily decorating and tinkering with every shiny sedan in the family garage, blocking the road with cars and even posting a lookout on top of a ladder, who used that vantage point to report as to when the bride and bridegroom were ready to depart . . .

ELEANOR GIBSON

But when the happy couple finally did come down stairs and out across the lawn into the waiting group, they dashed through a shower of rose petals and confetti and passed the whole line of incapacitated cars . . . and, piling into a battered old ark, they clattered serenely off with utter disregard for all the elaborate preparations which had been made to stop them . . .

The ceremony had been performed in historic King's Chapel in Boston . . . and before the bride changed into a brownish tweed travelling suit with turquoise blouse, she became the bride of Dr. Thomas Hale Ham in a princess style wedding gown of ivory satin with an ivory tulle veil cascading from a coronet of lace and seed pearls . . . Her bouquet was of lilies of the valley and gardenias . . .

Polly Palfrey and Josephine Ham, the bridesmaids, were a picturesque pair in their sheer organza frocks of lemon yellow with huge butterfly sleeves and French blue sashes and slippers . . . Their leghorn hats were trimmed with the same blue velvet ribbons and they carried arm bouquets of deep blue delphinium, talisman roses and fuchsia tulips . . .

The altar was banked with a lacy arrangement of all white flowers amidst tall white candelabra . . .

* * *

Gown of French Blue Lace

THE BRIDE'S MOTHER wore a gown of French blue lace with a small black turban and stiff veil . . . She occupied one of the old box pews with her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Greely Curtis, Jr., and the latter's young son . . . Mrs. Curtis, Jr., wore a black crepe suit with vivid fabric flowers decorating the brim of her picture hat, and was very much occupied keeping her small son from interrupting the service by murmuring his childish thoughts out loud . . .

Among the many wedding guests who motored down to Marblehead for the reception in the low rambling house situated on a hill overlooking the harbor and the ocean, were of course, the bride's aunts . . . Mrs. Margaret Curtis in a Dubonnet and white flowered silk with a straw hat of Dubonnet . . . Miss Harriet Curtis, who chose a colorful ensemble of lilac light weight wool . . . Mrs. Roger S. Warner, sister of the bride's mother, wore flowered silk on a black background and attended with Rachael and Roger S. Warner, Jr. . . . Rachael wore a nice outfit of navy blue with a sand colored boxy jacket and sand and navy sailor hat . . .

Mrs. Ward Thoron, who was also a Hooper and sister of Mrs. Warner and Mrs. Curtis, was there as were Mrs. John Briggs Potter, Ellen Potter, Peggy Nye in a flowered silk with a black redingote and sailor hat, Miss Marian and Miss Katharine Homans, Mrs. Robert Homans, and Mrs. Francis G. Shaw . . . Mrs. James Halstead of Dedham, a cousin of the bride, was gowned in greenish print with a green picture hat and George Ham, the best man, paraded around the lawn with his fiancee who wore a beautiful rose beige lace afternoon gown . . .

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Treat Paine were also guests as were Mrs. John G. Palfrey and Joanna, William Sumner Appleton, and Mrs. Jesse Eddy of Providence, wife of one of the ushers, who wore a tunic of May Wine chiffon over navy blue . . .

Following their honeymoon, "Fin" and "Hammie," as the couple is known to their friends, will live in Brookline . . .

Ben Foss did not have to buy Lee Marston an orchid to wear to the party which they gave at Ten Acre Saturday evening, to celebrate their engagement which had been announced earlier in the day, for an orchid was painted on the ascot tie which Lee wore with her white quilted taffeta evening coat.

Miss Caroline Hunnewell To Wed Francis Blake

Wedding plans seem to have definite place in the household of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin S. Blake of Weston and Mattapoisett.

Just last February 21, their daughter, Ruth Blake, became the bride of Andrew Oliver of New York in St. Mary's Church in Newton Lower Falls. The excitement of arrangements and preparations for the ceremony has hardly subsided, and now comes the announcement of the engagement of Francis Blake to Miss Caroline Amory Hunnewell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hunnewell of Commonwealth avenue and Wellesley, so planning and arranging must begin anew.

Miss Hunnewell made her debut in the garden of her parents' Wellesley estate in June, 1933. She is a sister of Miss Jane P. Hunnewell and Mr. Walter Hunnewell, Jr. Her mother was the former Minna C. Lyman, and she is the niece of Mrs. Lyman Lovering (Ellen B. Lyman) of Chestnut street; Miss Louisa Hunnewell of Commonwealth avenue, Mrs. Malcolm Donald (Gertrude Hunnewell) Milton, Mrs. Sidney M. Williams (Mary P. Hunnewell) of Wellesley and Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Hunnewell of Indian Farm, Wellesley.

Mr. Blake prepared for college at the Noble and Greenough School and was graduated from Harvard with the class of 1931. He was a member of the Hasty Pudding-Institute of 1770, the Signet Society, the Delphic, the Instrumental and the Speakers' Clubs. He is a brother of Miss Elizabeth Blake, Miss Joan Blake, Mr. Benjamin S. Blake, Jr. and Mrs. Andrew Oliver of New York. He is the grandson of Mrs. Francis Blake of "Kenwayin" in Weston, and the late Francis Blake, and a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Fitzgerald of Weston.

No date has been set for the wedding.

THE SENATOR

Hyde Park's Eye on Jobs For 2 Sons

"This is wash day, Timmie," says The Senator when he comes in, "and it being wash day let us clean up some items that cling to me here and there about various things and which pretty soon I lose in one way or another."

So saying, The Senator begins emptying his pockets and piles up on the bar an assortment of torn envelopes, some tickets stubs and match folders, a dirty cuff with scribbling, a corkscrew, crumpling of old papers and more in an assortment of this and that like you would find swept under the

The Senator sofa in a bachelor's home.

"Two more things, Senator," says Timmie, "and you qualify as one of Mayor Freddie's city dumps."

"Sometimes I feel like one, Timmie, and this is no lie," says The Senator, "but if you stir yourself and dump The Senator out a jolt of generous size, we get to work and clean up some things."

Well, Timmie reaches for The Senator's bottle, and instead of pouring one jolt he pours two, and who is this odd jolt for but himself.

Hyde Park Busy

"Nice work, Timmie," says the Senator, and he picks up the cuff and he looks at it.

"It says here on the laundry that City Collector Johnny Doherty of Hyde Park comes up for consideration by the Democratic state committee as a prospect for the lieutenant-governor nomination."

The Senator takes a sip of his jolt and a sip of water and then he turns the cuff and he says:

"Next, Timmie, it is written here that friends of City Councilor Clem Norton, of Hyde Park also, would organize a Norton-for-Mayor League in Dorchester, and do not forget the Johnny Dow-for-Mayor League in the East Boston some time ago."

Once more The Senator turns the cuff and this time he comes up with words like this:

"City Councilor Bob Wilson of Dorchester to be candidate for G. O. P. nomination for attorney general. If nominated, should get large Democrat vote in Boston November. Lives Ward 17.

"Ex-Representative John Concannon, Ward 16, Dorchester, quietly organizing the fight for Democratic nomination state Senate that section.

"Attorney Jim O'Keefe, South End, may oppose State Auditor Tom Buckley at Democratic primaries September.

"Representative Ray O'Connell, Springfield, believes western part of state should be represented on Democratic state ticket and may be candidate Democratic nomination for lieutenant-governor. Now serving fourth term in House."

"Is all that on that dirty piece of linen, Senator?" asks Timmie.

"It is all here on the record, Timmie," answers The Senator.

"Senator," says Timmie, admiringly, "what you could do with a whole shirt and a pencil."

What's in a Name?

Well, The Senator stuffs the cuff back in his pocket and he picks up a match folder and he looks in it but there is nothing there but matches, so he picks up another one and he says:

"Here is a note, Timmie, about how Street Commissioner Owen Gallagher gets fed up with Representative Owen Gallagher of Ward 7, South Boston and Dorchester, on account of their mail gets all mixed up and the City Hall Owen gets waked up all hours of the night with telephone calls from the House Owen's constituents, the one wishing the other retires from politics."

With this The Senator shuffles into his dirty and torn envelopes and comes out with the dirtiest, and from this he reads:

"Middlesex county shapes up as key spot in G. O. P. battle for governor nomination. Man swinging Middlesex and one other county gets state. Saltonstall S. O. L. here account support of Harry Dunlap Brown for sheriff two years ago. Joe MacHoney elected and holds whip hand in county. Treasurer Charlie Hatfield a Saltonstall man who has to watch own re-election. Bob Bushnell has call over Warren Bishop.

"Well, Timmie," says The Senator, "there is more of The Senator's shorthand on this and here and there in this mess, but The Senator neglects his drinking, and this is very bad indeed. We hereby call the wash day off until next week."

So saying, The Senator tosses off the rest of his golden rye, shoves the envelopes into his pockets and heads for the street.

Cuban Official's Son Killed

Havana, May 18 (AP)—Emilio Gaspar Rodriguez, Jr., son of the Cuban secretary of labor, was killed: Manuel Cue, inspector for the department of labor, and Navy Lieutenant Rogelio Planas were injured today in an automobile accident near Colon.

COLLEGE PAPER SCORES DEAL SPENDING

Raleigh, N. C., May 18 (US)—"Big figures mean little in these days of smug New Dealism. That is, as far as huge governmental expenditures are concerned, and as far as the expenditures add only a few more millions to the national debt."

The above editorial comment, expressing the resentment of young people at the administration's spending policies, appeared in the Technician, student weekly newspaper at the State College of North Carolina.

Student Editor Hall Morrison writes further that the national economic and political situation "concerns every college student" because "this debt will be paid or repudiated by the youth of today."

Morrison also believes the Roosevelt administration has opened up "a significant trend of governmental policies which will later be coped with by the youth of today."

The Federal Government, he points out, has entered upon an unprecedented program of spending the taxpayers' money.

"But even more serious than the actual debt are the trends in government," Morrison continued, pointing to constantly increasing Federal indebtedness and recent developments in administrative machinery.

J. W. Kenney To Be Feted By Friends

Outstanding leaders in the fields of politics, business and sports will join with his business associates to honor John W. Kenney, circulation manager of the Boston Sunday Advertiser and Boston Evening American, at a reception and banquet Thursday night, in Hotel Statler imperial ballroom.

Louis Leventhal

The occasion will mark the completion of nearly three decades of brilliant service in the newspapers and magazines of William Randolph Hearst.

An elaborate program of entertainment will be provided by stars of stage, night clubs and radio.

Heading the reception committee is Charles Brickel. He will be assisted by Ben Livingston, Abe Meyers, "Happy" Rubinovitz, Charles Isaacs, Ludlow Godfrey, Peter Cohen and Hyman Manovitch.

The arrangements committee is headed by Louis Leventhal, president of Local 239, Newspaper Chauffeurs and Distributors. Morris Levine is floor director. Hyman "Etch" Cohen is master of ceremonies.

New England's most popular circulation manager entered the Hearst service in 1907 as a clerk in the Boston office.

Seven years later, when only 24, he had become one of the East's leading circulation men.

He subsequently distinguished himself as circulation manager of the Chicago Herald and Examiner and the Detroit Times.

BOSTON BARBER STRIKE LOOMS

Some 3000 Boston barbers may be called out on strike within two days, it was learned at headquarters of the Barbers' Journeymen's Union today.

Charles E. O'Donnell, secretary-treasurer and business agent, said a meeting will be held at 113 Dudley street tomorrow night to discuss the matter.

The union, he said, has received wholesale complaints that men are not getting union minimum pay and that they are being worked longer than union hours.

If there is a strike, O'Donnell said, it will have no connection with the price-war strike now on in New York. There is no price war here, he said.

The union requires barbers to be paid a minimum of $26 weekly, plus 50 per cent of earnings greater than $28 weekly.

Its maximum hours are 7 a. m. to 8 p. m., daily and 9 p. m. Saturdays.

CARDINALS TO MEET

Secret Consistory on June 15

Vatican City, May 18 (AP)—Pope Pius today convoked two consistories of Cardinals—the first secret, on June 15, and the second public, on June 18.

In the secret consistory, prelates said they expected the Pope to create two new Cardinals, Monsignor Giovanni Mercati, the prefect of the Vatican Library, and Eugenio Tisserant, the pro-prefect of the library.

In the public session, the imposing Senate of the Roman Catholic Church will assist at the conferring of the Red Hat on four Cardinals to who were elevated to that rank during their absence on foreign diplomatic missions.

His Holiness is expected to deliver an allocution. Prelates say he may make important declarations in view of his approaching 79th birthday, May 31.

The Cardinals to receive the Red Hat are Enrico Sibilia, Papal Nuncio in Vienna; Francesco Marmaggi, Nunzio in Warsaw; Luigi magtione, Nunzio in Paris, and Federico Tedeschini, Nunzio in Madrid.

Their diplomatic positions in a moment of international stress prevented their attending the consistory last December in which 20 Cardinals were named.

Having reached the rank of Cardinals, they must now relinquish their posts abroad in favor of new appointees the Pope is considering.

This will be the nucleus of a considerable shakeup in the Vatican diplomatic service, prelates say.

The four Cardinals have already received the Red Berretta from the hands of the governments to which they are accredited, according to the old custom.

WPA POLITICS BARRED BY BILL

Washington, May 18 (INS)—A measure which would make alleged political use of the Works Progress Administration a penitentiary offense as well as bar employer intimidation in political campaigns was framed by a House judiciary sub-committee today.

The new proposal is a compromise between a Senate bill which, critics said, might have driven employers out of politics and a counter bill striking at alleged political intimidation by officials of the Roosevelt administration.

Representative Weaver (D.) of North Carolina, chairman of the sub-committee, planned to present the compromise measure to the full judiciary committee on Thursday.

"BUDGET LEAK" FUND EXPOSED

London, May 18 (AP) — Sir Alfred Butt, millionaire sportsman and Parliament member, told the British "budget leak" inquiry today that Colonial Secretary J. H. Thomas cleaned up 632 pounds 9 shillings (around $3160) in "insurance" against the 1935 election.

Sir Alfred, who denied vehemently that he and Thomas ever talked about the recently announced budget, said he had "induced" the cabinet member to take out 1000 pounds sterling insurance against an election being held in 1935.

Following the general election, won by the National government, in which Thomas was identified, the Parliament member sent Thomas a check for £632, he testified.

That was after he had deducted the insurance premium from the total face value of the policy, Sir Alfred said.

Milk Thief Hits Driver and Flees

There was quite a commotion in the South End and Roxbury today when all cruiser cars were ordered to halt an automobile with an alleged thief at the wheel.

Daniel Shea, 38, of Leroy street, Dorchester, a milk-wagon driver, said the man in the car had stolen a quart of milk, then punched his eye.

Stranger

Charlotte, N. C., May 18 (AP)—Nonchalantly it crossed a busy street intersection, until its strange appearance caused a commotion and the fire department was called.

Firemen identified it as an armadillo, a bony-plated animal, common in South America, but rarely found north of Texas.

CHAPTER 49

Lorraine kept Luana extremely busy all that morning and afternoon. There was more to do than Odette could possibly attend to, in the way of getting her wardrobe ready for the voyage.

Any number of small purchases had to be made at the last minute. These were delegated to Luana, since Lorraine had to go to the passport offices and to the customs house downtown.

Luana found time to buy a little gift for Jimmy, as well as for the departing Lorraine.

In her stateroom aboard the liner that evening, she gave Lorraine the two packages.

"You'll be seeing Jimmy, won't you?" she asked wistfully. "You'll give him my best."

Somehow, it had been impossible to tell Lorraine that she was engaged to Jimmy, although several times it had been on the tip of her tongue to do so. Now she despised herself for her own shilly-shallying and weakness.

Jimmy would tell Lorraine when he saw her.

"I shan't be long in Paris," said Lorraine casually, "after I've bought a few clothes I shall go down with my friends to the villa at Cannes."

Luana went early to her bed that night. Tomorrow morning she would go to the dressmaking firm that made her the offer—the splendid offer of $200 weekly—and discuss the new job, and come back and pack things and move into a hotel.

No more sharing of apartments with co-workers. Her experience with Yvonne taught her that.

Luana arose, refreshed and happy, at eight o'clock next morning, had her bath, dressed, and was down on the terrace of the penthouse at 8:15.

To her surprise, Mr. Vandaveer was there, leisurely eating his breakfast that Simms had served out on the terrace. He had come home late last night, he told her, and had been amazed to hear from Simms that Lorraine had gone.

"She tried to reach you at the hotel, but they didn't tell her that you'd checked out, she left a message. I heard her leave it," Luana assured him, feeling awkward.

They breakfasted together.

Lorraine's departure did not seem to have upset him. Probably he's used to these whims of hers, thought Luana. Despite his millions, she felt rather sorry for Mr. Vandaveer. He seemed lonely.

Did he really have the millions? In her comings and goings in the town, she had heard that brokers and bankers were doing very little business, these uncertain days . . .

But he seemed cheerful, this morning.

Over the kidneys and bacon and coffee, she told him of her new offer.

"I'm going round this morning and accept it, Mr. Vandaveer."

"If I were you, I wouldn't." He leaned back and lit a cigar. Her lips fell apart.

"But it's $200 a week, Mr. Vandaveer, and the very thing I was aiming at. I was only getting thirty-five before. It—to me it sounds a marvelous chance."

He smiled kindly at her.

"My dear Luana, hasn't it occurred to you that if you are worth $200 a week to others, you may be worth five times that amount—to yourself."

"I don't understand," she stammered. She was puzzled. He was an excellent business man, and she set great store by his opinion.

Bridge

A Backward Finesse

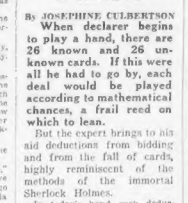
By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

When declarer begins to play a hand, there are 26 known and 26 unknown cards. If this were all he had to go by, each deal would be played according to mathematical chances, a frail reed on which to lean.

But the expert brings to his aid deductions from bidding and from the fall of cards, highly reminiscent of the methods of the immortal Sherlock Holmes.

In today's hand such deductions proved to declarer that a normal finesse would not win and induced him to take a backward finesse.

West dealer.
North-South vulnerable.



The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1♡	Pass	Pass	1♠
Pass	2♣ (1)	Pass	3♣ (2)
Pass	4♠ (3)	Pass	Pass
Pass

(1) North has a good hand but dares not raise too enthusiastically, since South may have based part of his bid on the knowledge that North must have at least a fair hand.

(2) Knowing that North may have held back, South makes a try for game.

(3) North can now raise to the full extent.

West opened the King of hearts and continued with the Jack.

On the third round his Ace was trumped by declarer. The King of spades was led, East winning with the Ace and returning a club. Dummy won with the Jack and two rounds of trumps were drawn, followed by two more rounds of clubs.

Having already lost three tricks declarer had to avoid losing a diamond trick. Mathematical chances favored the normal finesse, but South knew that East was too good a player to have passed as opening bid with a Queen as well as the Ace which had already shown up. The mathematician would next consider dropping the Queen on the first or second round of the suit, but South knew that this would not work.

The only hope was that East had the ten of diamonds. Declarer led the Jack, West covered with the Queen and dummy won the Ace. A small diamond was returned and South finessed, the eight spot winning the trick. Intelligent card reading and a backward finesse enabled declarer to make his contract.

Relax in Chic Congress-Chosen Lounging Togs

THERE REALLY should be a new classification in fashions . . . "active lounging" . . . because the day has gone when bathing suit, sweat shirt and bathrobe constituted the whole beach wardrobe . . . today's daughter doesn't go near the water half the time. And her clothes definitely are not the kind to carelessly hang on a hickory limb. They're quite swell affairs that need plush and satin hangers. All in all, they are in a distinctly dress-up mood and go to make cabana life an art in itself. Free, loose and easy, if you must be active around the cabana, they'll let you. So we give you "active lounging!"

Smart women on the Continent have sponsored the long coat for beach wear. Here it is in pure and dazzling white sharkskin buttoned up with rust seashells, with dart-edged pockets, and superb tailoring. And if you choose to wear it for evening or for a breagfast coat, whose business is it? Rust silk tailored pajamas are printed with mollusks and sea anemones. You're overlooking something pretty breathtaking if you don't invest in the stitched white linen visor that's as becoming as anything a musical comedy star ever wore. Miss Caroline Oveson models.

Right, Miss Virginia Richmond models one of the trickiest outfits of the season. Over her arm is slung a white sharkskin skirt, zippered from waist to hem, which matches the pert white sharkskin coat she wears. With the skirt on, the luscious water-color printed crepe play suit acts as blouse. Skirtless, you have a really elegant lounging affair. And, again, the jacket may work into the evening wardrobe. Clever, these designers! A white silk bandana is worn peasant-style . . . and if you only knew how comfortable and becoming this style is, you'd probably start an epidemic of it in your town!

Spring Term of Lee School

FROM MARTHA LEE'S MONDAY MORNING BROADCAST OVER STATION WMEX

Put May 26 and 27 down on your calendar, for these are the opening dates of our spring term of the Martha Lee Homemakers school.

The classes will be held on Tuesday evening at 6:30 and Wednesday afternoon at 2 p. m. as usual in the past, but this series is entirely new and of particular interest to all women who entertain and want to do it in the approved manner

This series of five classes on the Etiquette of Entertaining will include not only the selection of food, but the proper setting of the table and the etiquette of serving. Everything is being done to make this the most complete demonstration of table service and the whole procedure will be carried out before the audience, even to the serving and eating of the food.

This series of classes will run for five weeks, Tuesday evenings and Wednesday afternoons, and will cover entertaining at luncheons both indoors and outdoors, dinners, formal and informal, teas, buffet, parties, children's parties and bridge parties.

These classes, which are conducted by the Boston Evening American and Sunday Advertiser, are absolutely free. All that is necessary to attend is a ticket of admission, which may be received by writing to Martha Lee, 5 Winthrop square. As a record attendance is expected, write immediately!

A request today says, "I am planning a Sunday night supper for about fifteen people, and would like to have a chicken salad. Would you be so kind as to send me a recipe for same, and let me know the best way to cook a chicken in preparation for this; also how much chicken I will need? Have you any suggestions as to what can be served with this—dessert, etc.? Since it will be too hot to serve coffee, what shall I serve to drink?"

MENU
Chicken Salad
Cucumber and Radish Garnish
Watercress Sandwiches
Date and Nut Bread Sandwiches
Strawberry Tarts
Iced or Hot Coffee

The best way of cooking chicken for a chicken salad is to simmer until it is tender in water to which has been added onion, bay leaf, peppercorns and parsley. A 3½-4 pound fowl or chicken (an economical purchase) gives three cups of diced meat or one pound.

As the rest of the supper consists of cold food, hot coffee would not be out of place. As a matter of fact, it would be more desirable than the iced coffee.

CHICKEN SALAD
(Serves 15)

3 cups chicken, cooked and diced
½ teaspoon salt
2 cups celery, diced
1 cup canned or fresh pineapple, diced
1½ cups mayonnaise
16 ripe olives

Toss chicken, salt, celery, and pineapple together lightly. Chill. Before serving, add mayonnaise. Serve on crisp lettuce and garnish with olives and additional mayonnaise.

Married Comrades

CHAPTER 12

"NO!" I protested in alarm as Dicky said that I was the only person who could manage Philip Veritzen.

"But me no buts'," he quoted, smiling and holding the door wide open with the obvious expectation that I would pass through it and go to the telephone, at the New York end of which Noel's father was waiting.

"You know what an impatient person our eminent friend is. You don't want to get him any sorer at those children than he is now, I tell you 'delay is dangerous'."

"I don't like it." I said stubbornly, even as I yielded to his plea for Mary and Noel, though I considered it a specious one, and passed through the door. "You ought to talk to him, Dicky."

And have both of us biting holes in the surrounding atmosphere because we can't reach each other's throat?" my husband declared banteringly, but with a serious note sounding beneath the gayety to my practiced ears.

"Noel I yield to no one in respect and admiration for your brilliant air, but he and I never have clicked into friendliness somehow, although it is more than probably my fault. I should only irritate him to madness if I tried to placate him."

I did not hear Noel's reply, for my pace to the telephone had increased with Dicky's explanation.

But I knew that Dicky was too generous when he said that the antagonism which undeniably existed between himself and Philip Veritzen was "more than probably" his fault.

I could readily understand Dicky's reluctance to talk to Philip Veritzen, especially in his present tense and irritated mood. Noel's temperamental father had been acutely conscious of Dicky's ill-repressed jealousy during the period of my association with the Veritzen staff, and with ridiculous egotism, he had resented it. Always the two men had kept their antagonism veneered with elaborate formal courtesy, and I did not blame Dicky for not risking a possible rending of that mask.

But though I detested the commission, I was jubilant at the alacrity with which Dicky had assigned to me the task of dealing with Philip Veritzen.

It meant another proof of the blessedly peaceful new comradeship with my husband which the near tragedy investing the opening of Marion's lock box had brought to us. To see Dicky realizing that there never had been any reason for his jealousy of Philip Veritzen; Dicky with humorous camaraderie requesting that I talk to Noel's temperamental father, and evincing no jealousy whatever of the undeniable fact that the great producer, though no longer having any romantic interest in me, still valued by friendship and counsel—these things, I told myself as I took up the telephone were more than compensation for the disagreeable task of dealing with Philip Veritzen in the temperamentally angry mood which I knew must be his.

But, to my surprise, when I had said, "Good morning, Mr. Veritzen, I am going to have kept you waiting." I heard no anger in his voice, only tense anxiety as he queried abruptly without waiting for the formal courteous words and manner which always invest any greeting of his.

"Are Noel and Mary there with you?"

ADVICE on LOVE and MARRIAGE by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Hard Work More Certain Road to Success Than College Degree

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"Shall I mortgage my home to send my son to college in September?"

This question more than 50 Greater Boston men have asked me during the past week. In almost every case, Mother insists that her boy have all the opportunities his young friends enjoy, that no sacrifice is too great to make them possible.

And Father, usually less enthusiastic, looks twice at the house representing 20 years or more of hard work and wonders whether the investment will be something like the family car which looked well, but seldom ran.

To these men my advice is ever the same. The whole thing depends on the son, the type of boy he is, the particular talents he has, the amount of work he wants to do. It is as foolhardy to educate some young men as it is not to educate others.

Most parents, particularly mothers, make the mistake of thinking a college education the short road to success. Nothing could be further from the truth. There are physicians, attorneys, teachers and a hundred other varieties of professional men glad to accept welfare jobs today. The diplomas that hang on their walls are not even as useful as the grocery store calendar.

MORE JOBLESS LIKELY

A month hence thousands of young men will be turned loose by colleges and universities throughout the nation. Many will find employment. Many, by far the greater number, will be just plain out of luck.

The young man who went to college, obtained a lot of "high ideas," ignored the real professors, listened to the radical ones, and emerged with a burning desire to make over the world, is less useful today than when he enrolled as a freshman.

He'll mount a soapbox, tell all about Karl Marx, eulogize Lenin, glorify Stalin—but he wouldn't think of getting down and rolling his hands with the workers he is so concerned about saving.

No indeed. He's a superior being. His diploma tells you so. Why, four years of study went into earning the degree that lifts him above the common herd.

Unfortunately, too many of the young man who will be graduated a month hence are of this class. Even though you couldn't make them believe it now, they are this moment doomed to failure. Like the hand-carved dollars their parents spent might just as well have been used to kindle the fire in the kitchen stove.

THEY WILL SUCCEED

On the other hand, thousands of other graduates will leave school with the knowledge that life for them has just begun, that every year will be so much more hard work, that the only real success is that which represents limitless effort, physical and mental. These lads will be the prosperous men of tomorrow.

Mothers and fathers who make life too easy for their sons always regret it. And those parents who are willing to heed this old lady with the white hair and wrinkled face will see to it that Johnny, Georgie or Tommy learns the value of a dollar and how hard it is to earn one. Equipped with such knowledge, college will mean something to him.

Without it, all the degrees, diplomas and fraternity memberships that were ever thought of will be about as useful to the young man as a Jurgnette to a cowboy.

Personally, I'd rather be a successful plumber than a briefless barrister or a patientless physician. Or I'd rather build houses than just look at them and wish I owned one.

CONSIDER MONEY ANGLE

With this in mind, I'd see that my son became a good craftsman if he had the qualifications. I'd never think of encouraging him to select a vocation just because the boy-across-the-street happened to have chosen it.

Education, therefore, depends on the individual and the family pocketbook. Both should be considered. Each has its particular limitations. And neither should work to the disadvantage of the other.

My five-dollar check for the best problem letter of the day goes to "Disgusted," a young woman who writes as follows:

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am 17 and one of a large family which I have been supporting for more than a year. Though my father is in his early fifties, he refuses to work and insists on living on my small salary.

At the end of the week, Miss Fairfax, I haven't a single penny to spend on myself. My clothes are just rags, my hair looks terrible and, all in all, I and money are about as far apart as it is possible to be.

The most hateful part of my situation is that my father takes a liberal amount of my earnings and gives it to my younger sister who does the housework. She can always get a new hat, attend a dance or go to a movie. Home is my place before and after working hours.

The disregard my father shows me is shared by everyone I invite to the house. Naturally no one ever comes a second time.

I am sick and tired of it, and do not know what to do. That is why I am seeking your advice. Please help me, dearest friend.

DISGUSTED.

MY DEAR CHILD:

The thing for you to remember is that your problem is only temporary. Two or three years hence your younger brothers and sisters will be working, and you will be able to do more as you please. And very likely a young man will come along and you will be married.

If I were you I'd never quarrel with my father. Fighting never gets one anywhere. However, in a nice way I'd let him know a good appearance and a happy mind are necessary to your keeping your job. That will probably influence him more than all the pleas you could ever make.

As to your father has no right to sit at home and expect his young children to support him. If he were working, his conscience would be clearer and his attitude less irritable.

Take the five dollars I am sending you for the prize problem and buy something for yourself. Or put it aside and take in a movie once or twice a week.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

New Milk Facial

POSED BY ROSALIND RUSSELL.

By ARLINE GOULD

ENCHANTING satin lustre of clear, fair skin is more desirable during the next few months than at any time of the year.

Sunlight points out with merciless clarity any blemishes, wrinkles or poor texture of the skin. So before we go romancing on the beach or driving in an open car through country roads, let's give a thought to our faces.

One of Nature's best beautifiers is milk and I have discovered a grand milk pack which I recommend particularly at this time of year.

Milk, of course, when taken internally, helps to clear the skin and to eliminate sallowness. Although we take too much for granted the heaven-sent blessings of milk, it's interesting to remember that in ancient days a "land of milk and honey" was another way of expressing paradise!

* * *

The external use of milk as an aid to loveliness has long been a favorite beauty treatment of fastidious women.

It is now possible to buy a milk pack all prepared which is simple to use and is amazingly effective. The face mask has the smooth fluffiness of whipped cream and ripples over your pores with a soothing coolness.

Powdered milk, egg white, salts and a pure astringent are the ingredients which make up this delightful facial. This excellent combination of natural beautifiers nourishes the skin through increased circulation, cleanses the pores and acts as a gentle bleach. The astringent tightens sagging muscles and stimulates the skin into a healthy lustre.

The skin should be cleansed thoroughly with water and a pure, mild soap, followed by a liquefying or cleansing cream. Both results are obtained if one lies down and relaxes completely while the mask is on the face.

The milk pack is left on the skin for 20 minutes and is washed off with luke warm water. It should be used twice a week for oily skin and once a week for dry skins.

If you wish to know the name of this excellent milk pack which leaves the skin smooth, cleansing and gently bleaching it at the same time, telephone Liberty 4000, or write Arline Gould, Boston Evening American, enclosing a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Expert Care Needed for Arthritis

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

FOR centuries, for always probably, mankind has been the victim of inflamed and painful joints.

It is interesting to know that many of our modern attempts at cure, such as heat and massage, are measures which have been handed down to us by our forefathers.

There is a great deal of mental uncertainty about rheumatism and arthritis. Many persons confuse these ailments and, in consequence, apply the wrong treatment. I venture to say that many would be benefited if they first accurately determined what is the real cause of their symptoms.

PROGRESS MADE

Arthritis is an inflammation of the joint. It is divided into two types, acute and chronic. In the acute form its victim may be confined to bed for several weeks. As soon as the acute pain has subsided, the sufferer, unfortunately, is prone to forget about it and to neglect continuing the proper care. Sooner or later this failure of attention leads to the chronic form of arthritis.

It is only within recent years that physicians made real progress with the disturbance. It is know now that a center infection somewhere in the body may be the underlying cause of damage to a joint. For example, infection of the teeth, tonsils, nasal sinuses, or other structures of the body may lead to inflammation of a knee joint, shoulder or elbow joint.

I cannot overstate the importance of this fact in dealing with arthritis. I emphasize this point because there is little hope of cure until such points of infection are dealt with properly.

"Your Figure, Madame!"

By IDA JEAN KAIN

Copyright, 1936, King Features Synd., Inc.

EXERCISE is no match for calories. You cannot hope to lose weight at golf, walking or the daily dozen, as long as you continue to eat in excess of your energy needs. The energy (calories) supplied in even small servings of food is much greater than can be used up in moderate exercise.

Let's compare the number of calories used in your favorite activities with the calories supplied in common foods. Walking at the rate of two and one-half miles an hour, a person weighing 130 pounds will burn in one hour approximately 165 calories, which amount could be offset by eating a handful of peanuts, half a doughnut, or two extra pats of butter.

Even a brisk walk of three and three-fourths miles an hour burns only 250 calories, which is produced fewer calories than contained in the average sandwich.

Combine Both Methods

You may feel that 18 holes of golf entitles you to a hearty luncheon—but not if you expect to lose weight! Giving you the benefit of the most devious game, you probably would not burn more than the 700 to 800 calories supplied in the average golfer's luncheon. It seems appalling that this could be true, but figures always tell the truth!

The individuals who can reduce by excercise alone belong to the group that are only slightly overweight and are in the minority. A mere ten pounds of excess can be removed by exercise. In fact, from the standpoint of both health and figure, that is the best way to do it. But with 20 or more pounds of overweight the average person lacks time, persistence and endurance to reduce without dieting. In general, exercise cannot satisfactorily cope with any overweight above 10 per cent and should be supplementary to diet.

By combining diet with exercise in the best regulated program, a twenty-pound loss can be established over a period of three months. This fixes a best rate of approximately one and three-fourths pounds per week. This steady loss may be stabilized from week to week, and is likely to be permanent.

This is not an argument against exercise—far from it!—for every reducing program should include regular and consistent exercise. Its value is not in the utilization of calories, but, rather, in the toning effects on the musculature. What exercise lacks in dealing with calories, it more than makes up in its beautifying qualities. Exercise evolves symmetry, acts as a skin astringent to prevent bagginess, following removal of fatty tissue, and strengthens and tones the muscles to condition them against a redeposit of fat.

From every standpoint—health, figure, and permanence of weight loss—it is best to reduce by diet and exercise rather than by either method alone.

With their new frocks the quintuplets carry dolls, one for each, miniature editions of themselves even to their dark curls. And each doll has a silk frock and sunbonnet just like those of her young mistress.

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA

DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE YOUTH OF THE AMERICAS IN AVIATION

TODAY'S PILOTS OF MODELS —TOMORROW'S MODEL PILOTS!

Give three cheers for the girl members of the Flying Hawks, that amazing Junior Birdmen squadron in John Winthrop school, Dorchester!

Nine of the girls, ranging in age from 12 to 14, have entered the Outdoor Air Races for model planes to be held in June.

Not content with establishing itself as the largest squadron in Boston, not satisfied to win the wing bronze banner and not sitting back with folded hands after setting a record number of members with 200 per cent grades in the Eagle test, the group now sends a delegation of 25 into the battle for the New England model plane championship and the nine medals for the runners-up.

The 25 include the nine girls, the largest number ever entered in a big official wing competition. They will all participate in the glider event.

16 PRIZES OFFERED

They are expected to compete, too, in the Nordic (Model Flying Contest to be held at Franklin Field, Blue Hill and Talbot avenues, Dorchester, next Saturday. Sixteen prizes will go to winners of this meet which will include two of the three events for the air races.

The nine girls are:

Thelma Hull, 51 Brook avenue; Frances Egan, 209 Blue Hill avenue; Alberta Duncan, 1 Ingleside street; and Vivian Zinkowski, 23 Fernboro street, all Roxbury; Dorothy Kenyon, 50 Alexander street; Margaret Knell, 10 Woodford street; Mary McMahon, 39 Folsom street; Loretta F. Walsh, 45 Alexander street, and Mary Craven, 42 Alexander street, all Boston.

BOYS ENTER

Boys in the Flying Hawks who have officially entered the races are:

Joseph Dunn, Edward Ward, Edward Johnson, Roy Oro, Gus August, Frank Panaro, John Smith, Raffiele DeFrancesco, Edwin C. Sullivan, Edward Monahan, Ernest Gowen, Jr., Thomas Lightburn, Arnold Zetterlund, Charles A. West, James Molineaux and Fred Doble.

The achievements of the Hawks have been due largely to the untiring efforts and interest of the sponsor, Miss Esther E. Larson, teacher of eighth grade geography at the John Winthrop school.

Play This at Your Party

SEE the happy grins at Mary Anne's party! They've spent the last hour playing that uproarious game, "Murder."

Charlie, the paper-capped salad-passer, was the "murderer." He got that way by pulling the shortest of the sticks in Jim's hand. Harry, by pulling the longest stick, became "detective." Out in the hall for him, while the rest conferred.

Charlie did not tell any one he was to be the "murderer," but they all cooked up a plot about spending the night in a haunted house. Then the lights went out, everybody milled around, and Charlie kissed in Mollie's ear, "You're stabbed in the back, for meddlin' with the hidden jewels!"

When the lights came on, Mollis was found gracefully expiring on the sofa, muttering "Jools!" In came Harry, the detective, asking questions. Every one could answer truthfully except the murderer, who had to lie as long as he could get away with it.

Charlie was marvelous. He kept them guessing for nearly an hour. When his foul motive was uncovered and his alibi shattered, he was sentenced to pass the salad.

To make your next party a wow, get hints from our 40-page booklet, GOOD PARTIES. Stunts, games, riddles, parlor tricks, novelties for high school or church parties, ideas for showers, holidays, birthdays. Delicious menus, correct form of invitations. Just a treasure!

Marry-Go-Round

By Helen Rowland

THE PERFECT BORE

He is overflowing with "good advice" about everything—usually a gallon of words to a spoonful of thought.

He is fearful, in a way—because you never have to do any of the talking.

When you try to say something, he gazes vaguely over your head while he thinks of the brilliant remark he is going to spring next.

All the lights in a woman's eyes are green lights to HIM. He never recognizes a "stop" signal.

He mistakes audacity for "technique"—and swagger for "sex-appeal."

He never begs a girl to kiss him—he merely leans back and PERMITS her to kiss him.

If a woman does not fall for him he is not embarrassed. He simply concludes that she is "hiding her love." And no matter how often she may turn him down, he is secretly convinced that she is "just leading him on."

He lolls around the beach all day in bathing-trunks, under the impression that he looks like Johnny Weissmuller.

When he dolls up for a "formal", it seems to him that he is really "gilding the lily," but he is always pleased with the effect.

He is usually a parlor-sitter, who fancies that, if he spends a whole evening on a girl, he need not spend any money on her.

He is never bored when he is alone—or unless there is somebody else around to take his mind off himself.

He goes to church, sometimes—in order to worship Himself. And takes a girl along to help him.

In brief, the Perfect Bore is the Complete Egotist.

He doesn't need any applause. He KNOWS he's good!

If Mothers Only Knew

Thousands of Children Suffer from Round Worms, and Their Mothers do not always know what the trouble is.

Signs of Round Worms are:—Constipation, deranged stomach, swollen upper lip, offensive breath, hard and full stomach with pains, pale face, eyes heavy, short dry cough, grinding of the teeth, etc.

'THE BRANDY MURDER CASE'

As Told by Ace Crime Reporters

Rich Drover Slain; Body Put in Cellar

This is the 104th in a series of true murder-mystery stories from New England police and court annals being presented daily in the Boston Evening American and the Boston Sunday Advertiser.

Luther Conant, Jr., one of the ace reporters for the American and Sunday Advertiser relates this absorbing story of "The Brandy Murder."

By LUTHER CONANT, JR.

This is a story that ends at the gallows because the sweet smell of ripe peaches clung to an empty phial.

In the year 1847 the "Manifest Destiny" of America, by means of a war with Mexico, had stretched across the arid deserts of New Mexico to the rich soil of California.

Two years later the finding of a gold nugget was to sweep a whole civilization westward.

But on the autumn afternoon of September 29, 1847, the inhabitants of the village of Waterville, Maine, were more concerned with the whereabouts of their most popular citizen than the destiny of a continent.

Edward Mathews, cattle drover by trade and good fellow by instinct, was one of the town's wealthiest residents. It was the days when farmers counted their herds by the thousands and Mathews had one of the largest in the county.

He had returned from Boston three days before after a highly successful disposal of several thousand beeves.

Mathews' homecomings were always the occasion for a week of conviviality among the gayer blades of the town—and always at his expense.

Apprehension

But this time he had not been seen since his arrival and the apprehension expressed for him was indeed genuine. Just before supper the word went around that Mathews had been located and was planning a party for the Parker House, the town's proud boast of hostelry, at eight that evening.

The repressed spirits of the men knew no bounds and it was with many cheers that the wind and sun tanned figure of the driver was greeted as he entered the banquet room that night.

If he seemed more preoccupied than was his nature few noticed it in the songs that followed the flowing cup around the table.

But when "Ed" announced an hour or so later that he had to keep an appointment it caused a buzz of speculation. He was not one to leave the companionship of "good fellows" so early for feminine wiles.

When hour after hour passed and he did not rejoin the party speculation grew into anxiety and once again the whereabouts of Ed Mathews was the chief topic of conversation.

Vacant House

Nor did it end with a party this time. Rather, it ended with the finding of his crushed and battered body in the cellar of a vacant house facing the village green. Missing from his clothes was his heavy watch, his most prized possession.

A few of the town's more puritanical blue-bloods adopted an "I knew he would come to no good end" attitude but for the most part there was widespread regret and indignation.

Mathews had been that unusual type of good mixer who had made no enemies and the local sheriff was more than ready to admit that the case had him stumped.

It was believed that the head injuries had been caused by an axe or hatchet. But since such a tool was to be found in every home in the village that clue was valueless.

General opinion placed the blame on the crime on some roughneck from an upstate county and this theory gained credence at the post mortem examination of the body.

Waterville's three leading physicians co-operated in the autopsy, doctors Thayer, Plaistead and Coolidge.

Doctor Valorous

The finding was announced by the latter, known throughout the country both for his skill and his given name of Valorous.

"There was a quantity of brandy in the stomach," he reported, "and evidences of some kind of a fit, induced by good living.

"Apparently the head had been beaten with a sharp instrument."

That Ed had died with a drink of good brandy inside him did not come as a surprise.

But the doctor was able to shed a light on the disappearance of the slain man from his party.

"Poor Ed was in my office last night just before ten o'clock," he told the sheriff.

"Rich as he was, he needed a little ready cash, and I let him have the $200 I collected yesterday."

"Later, after he left, I went home. On my way, I saw him in the company of two men, and he seemed to be staggering a little, as if under the influence of drink."

On the fourth day after the murder a young man visited the sheriff and the case was solved.

He told the sheriff of finding an empty vial in the office of one of the local doctors which had smelt of ripe peaches. The young man was an assistant to the physician and he knew what that odor meant—prussic acid.

He knew considerably more it developed later at the trial.

As a result of the youth's story the sheriff announced, amidst some local indignation, that a second autopsy would be performed on the body, this time by Professor Loomie, a renowned pathologist.

The verdict of death by poisoning came as a surprise to all except the sheriff, the young man—and the murderer. Professor Loomis had reported:

"Only a little acid was found. Prussic acid is a highly volatile poison, and evaporates very rapidly. Whoever administered it possibly knew that.

"What is more significant, certain organs of the body which would retain evidence of acid longer than those remaining were removed from the body at the first post mortem"

The sheriff waited no longer and arrested Dr. Coolidge on a charge of murdering Edward Mathews.

The town was dumfounded. Doctors Plaistead and Thayer came to the support of their colleague and demanded that the sheriff be ousted.

Dr. Coolidge, himself, exhibited a range of emotions of which he had not hitherto been believed capable. And he stoutly denied his guilt.

The trial was the local sensation of the year. Whole families took box lunches and drove for miles to the county courthouse. Even farm chores were forgotten in the excitement of the case.

Tells All

Medical Student Flint on the witness stand. It was his story that doomed the killer.

Opinion was fairly evenly divided until the prosecution called its first witness. From that time on it was only a question of restraining the spectators.

That first witness was Thomas Flint, assistant to Dr. Coolidge.

Now, from the witness stand, there was related the story that Flint had told the sheriff.

"On the night of the murder, I went to Dr. Coolidge's office, where I was studying, and Dr. Coolidge came in and talked about getting a subject for dissection. He said he had arranged for one.

"A little after eight o'clock someone came up the stairs and knocked. The door was locked, and when Dr. Coolidge arose to unlatch it, I went out another way. I did not see who called.

"I went to my boarding house. After ten o'clock, I was going to bed, when Dr. Coolidge came in hurriedly and told me he wished me to return to the office with him. When we got to the office, there was a dim light there. He locked the door and said to me,

"'I am going to reveal to you a secret which involves my professional honor and my very life; that cursed little Ed Mathews came in here and went to take a glass of brandy and fell dead. He now lies in the other room.

"'I thumped him on the head to make believe he was murdered outside.'

"Dr. Coolidge asked me what we should do with him. I told him I did not know. He said we must get him out of the office, and spoke of the river.

"I believed what he said, and realized it might hurt the finest professional reputation in Waterville. I told him it was too bright for the river. He spoke of a vacant lot. I said we couldn't carry the body so far.

"After a time I spoke of the cellar of that vacant building. It was too mean, the doctor said. I insisted it was not. The cellar was often broken into by drunken vagrants, sleeping off the fumes of drink.

"He agreed finally. He took the lamp and went down and prepared a place. He came back and we took off our shoes and carried the body down cellar.

"There was a sack over the head, because I could not stand the staring look in the eyes. Evidently they did not bother the doctor."

Odor Clue

Thomas Flint, young medical student, sniffing an empty phial in the ofice of one of the local doctors.

Further testimony by Flint told how, at the first autopsy, he had carried away parts of the murdered man's stomach and hid them. At the time, Dr. Coolidge had given as his explanation that the parts smelled of brandy and would leave an odor in the office.

That this bit of petty larceny of a corpse had been performed under the very eyes of the innocent Thayer and Plaistead more than reconciled those honorable gentlemen to the fate of their colleague.

At the doctor's order he had destroyed an empty phial in the office. That phial had smelled of prussic acid and Flint could not remember that it had been used in the course of pratice.

On top of that the doctor had requested him to care for approximately $1500.

This might not have seemed an unusual request to the majority of the townspeople who believed Coolidge to be more than economically secure.

But Flint was one of the few who knew the real state of the doctor's finances, Coolidge owed scores of persons sums ranging from $1000 to $2500.

Guileless as his testimony had been, Flint proved an unshakeable witness during cross examination.

The case was given to the jury and within a few hours the expected verdict was returned.

"Guilty of murder in the first degree."

Shortly afterwards, in the presence of hundreds whom he had attended on their sick beds, or even brought into this world, Dr. Valorous P. Coolidge was sendenced to be hanged by the neck until dead.

The matter of the unpaid bills however, was never settled.

(In tomorrow's Boston Evening American, another true murder-mystery story, taken from New England police annals, will be published.)

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

You remember what Mark Twain said...

...he said there were only two times when he wasn't smoking... one was when he was eating and one was when he was sleeping.

Yes...there's a lot of satisfaction in smoking ...and it's true that tobacco has never been used in purer milder form than it is today in Chesterfield Cigarettes.

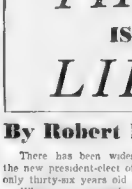
THIS IS LIFE

By Robert E. Rogers

There has been widespread comment that the new president-elect of Wellesley College is only thirty-six years old.

When it is remembered that she replaces President Hazard whose age is nearly double her own and that the president of a sister institution, Miss Woolley of Mount Holyoke, is over seventy—that fatal, fatal age in Massachusetts!—Miss Mildred H. McAfee, dean of women at Oberlin, seems indeed young.

Young, that is, to anyone who is not a veteran alumna of Wellesley. For there are still some elderly ladies who can remember when their president was a frail young woman, hardly more than a girl, twenty-six years of age!



ROBERT E. ROGERS

Her name was Alice Freeman, later the wife of the Harvard philosopher, George Herbert Palmer.

One of the most beautiful, informal, and intimate of modern biographical writings is the book, "Alice Freeman Palmer," written by her husband and published by Houghton Mifflin Co. in 1908. It is the story of a farm girl who grew up in straightened circumstances and in frail health, but with a first class mind and profoundly religious character.

Early Marriage No Lure To Girl Craving Learning

She was engaged at fourteen to an admirable young man who intended to make her a pastor's wife. But she decided that she was too young to marry until she had educated herself, and she dismissed him.

She went, one of the earliest of co-eds, to Ann Arbor. While in college, she supported herself largely and helped educate brother and sister.

She graduated from Michigan at twenty-one, was called to Wellesley as professor of history at twenty-three, was acting-president of Wellesley at twenty-six, and, the following year, president. Five years more and she resigned from the presidency and married George Herbert Palmer and went to the old yellow house opposite the Harvard Union to live. That was in 1887. In 1902 she died at the age of forty-seven.

It is, I think, one of the most crowded and breath-taking careers in recent times. And according to Professor Palmer, in those nine years at Wellesley, six as its leader, she laid the foundations of what was to be the Wellesley of the succeeding half century.

The college had been founded by Henry Fowle Durant in 1875, and he had been its only president. He was a wealthy man; he paid for the college and dominated it. It was by his decision that the little girl barely out of college should become president after only three years of teaching experience.

So far as teaching and administrative ability were concerned, and personality requisite to make girls only a little younger to love her and obey her and draw inspiration from her, she did not betray Mr. Durant's hopes for her. The tributes which her husband quotes from distinguished men and women when she died bear ample testimony to the effect she had upon the generation in which she lived.

Co-Education Her Idea Of Kind Required by Life

Apparently her management of her young women at Wellesley was the outstanding excellence of her career, though it is interesting to note that she did not think it the best form of education for girls. To quote from Professor Hale at Chicago:

"It was Mrs. Palmer's conviction that the normal form of education for both sexes is that in which the natural relations—begun in the life of the home and neighborhood, continued for the great majority in the life of the school, and inevitably in the later social life—are carried without break through the four years of higher intellectual life. She may have been right and she may have been wrong; but that such a woman, with her experience of Ann Arbor, of Wellesley, of Radcliffe and of Harvard, should have held this belief is a fact to be reckoned with."

For some years after her marriage she was dean of women at Chicago. She was for years an important figure on the Massachusetts State Board of Education and was influential in increasing the training period of the young women who were going to be teachers.

As President Eliot said: "To my mind, this career is unmatched by that of any other American woman. Mrs. Palmer's life and labors are the best example thus far set before American womanhood."

Gov. Curley, Trustees To Act

Amherst, May 18—Trustees of Massachusetts State College may be called this week to consider charges made in a recent state auditor's report that state funds properly and livestock at the college had been improperly handled, the Boston Evening American learned today.

Gov. James M. Curley has already announced he will call several State College officials before the Executive Council for questioning on the charges.

One official who was named in the auditor's report as the recipient of personal gain at the expense of the Commonwealth, denied he knew anything of the charges and refused to comment on the report.

Double Probe

A two-fold investigation of the charges is expected to begin this week, with both [illegible] and the other by the college trustees [illegible]

[illegible] all probe [illegible] on the [illegible] of the college in [illegible] two weeks.

Governor Curley, commenting on the [illegible] said: "I see no reason why an [illegible] should not [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] up until the present time.

"I intend to call for reports made by state auditors concerning the handling of funds at the State College," the Governor said.

Sees Duty

"As Governor, I am ex-officio a member of the board of trustees of the State College. I feel it is the duty of the trustees to see to it that the affairs of the college are handled in a manner that is beyond criticism.

"I understand some of the charges made by the state auditor involve practices that result apparently from an ignorance of the law on the part of some officials rather than from any dishonesty.

"However, ignorance of the law can scarcely be tolerated in those whose duty it is to handle state funds or property."

Reported failure on the part of trustees of the State College, as well as on the part of trustees of other State institutions, to act on recommendations of the State auditor's department, has caused State Auditor Thomas H. Buckley to order copies of all future audit reports sent to the speaker of the House and to the president of the Senate.

Lost Reports

[illegible] and [illegible] reports from becoming "lost" [illegible] these offices have been in the past [illegible] Auditor Buckley brings.

The state auditor's report which has prompted Gov. Curley to call officials of the State College into a [illegible] last November.

[illegible] the report covered the accounts of [illegible] of December 1, 1933 to November 30, 1934.

The report charged that one official received personal and [illegible] special [illegible] of the college [illegible] and that there had been numerous improper transactions between [illegible] funds.

Gen. Edwards Bridge at Lynn Open

Efforts are being made today to insure posthumous award of the Distinguished Service Medal to General Clarence R. Edwards, in whose memory the bridge linking Lynn and Revere across the Saugus river was dedicated yesterday.

In tribute to one man who went down in the World War history as the "Daddy of the Yankee Division," approximately 5000 men, women and children paraded across the bridge prior to the dedication exercises. Hundreds of the marchers were "Daddy Edwards' Boys."

Governor Curley, commending the devotion to duty of General Edwards and the patriotic loyalty of the men who served under him, caustically rebuked educational leaders who have opposed the teachers' pledge of loyalty to the constitutions of the state and nation.

Congressman William P. Connery, former color sergeant of the 101st Infantry, delivered a lengthy eulogy of General Edwards in which he described the dedication exercises as a fitting challenge to the undermining influences of Communism.

"As long as one of us lives," Congressman Connery said, "we will resist any attempt on the part of anyone to overturn by force the government of the United States, which has been perpetuated and sanctified by the blood of heroes of all our wars."

ZIONISTS CHIEF DIES AT 74

London, May 18 (USI)—Dr. Nahum Sokolow, one of the founders and for 40 years a leading figure in the World Zionist movement, died in his London home tonight. He was 74 years old.

Known throughout the world as the "grand old man of Zionism," Dr. Sokolow was active in the movement for the renaissance of the Jewish national homeland in Palestine up until the very hour of his death, which was sudden.

Dr. Sokolow died at a time when the Zionist movement is passing through the most critical period since it was founded by Dr. Theodore Herzl in 1896.

Tension in Palestine is at a dangerous pitch with fresh disorders breaking out daily between the Arabs and the Jewish settlers and taking their toll of lives.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN

By Katharine C. Gray

(Boston Society Girl, and Guest Conductor of the Girl About Town Column)

Flying the Red Cross pennant isn't as exciting as it sounds. It's good hard work for the society girls who make up Boston's speedy Volunteer Motor Corps.

The leisure class is a thing of the past. Girls who used to fritter away their time attending pink teas and dancing parties are more serious minded these days.

By reporting for duty day-in-and-day-out, the girls furnish their own cars. They drive the sick and crippled to hospitals, deliver packages and serve as combination chauffeurs and social workers. Hours are long and tiring. It's a rigid routine. There's no smoking allowed while on duty.

KATHARINE C. GRAY

Captain of this year's corps is Mrs. James M. Rothwell. She is assisted by Dorothy Austin, Louise Perkins, Jeannette McGregor, Dorothy Seecomb, Lucette Paquet, Polly Jennings and the two Phelan girls, Virginia and Priscilla. Others are Esther Binney, Gertrude Stevens, Margaret Jones, Mrs. George MacLaren and Mrs. Andrew Casassa.

The girls furnish their own uniforms. Snappy outfits of gray-blue whipcord with Sam Brown belts and over-seas caps.

Yachts and Golf Tops on Sports List

Tops in the world of yachting along our seaboard are Mrs. Henry Pratt McKean and Elizabeth Hovey. It's a little world of its own, once the season opens. Talk is of nor'westers, topsails and fo'castles! A difficult jargon for landlubbers to understand.

Tennis is another sport that has its faithful women enthusiasts. Following in the steps of Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, Boston's queen of the courts, are Katherine Winthrop, Mrs. Marjorie Morrill Painter and Mrs. Virginia Rice Johnson. They have a way of capturing "love sets."

As for golfing! Mary Slattery, former champion of the Woodland Country Club, has put many a man golfer to shame. She is chairman this year at Scituate's Golf Club.

Stag lines are in for a dilemma at next season's parties. The twins, Mimi and Betty Van Antwerp, daughters of the George T. Van Antwerps of Salem, are due to make their debut. And no one can tell which is which. Even the professional lads who make a habit of crashing parties!

But perhaps their mother will figure out an identification system. She is the twin sister of Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall Tuckerman, 2nd., and must have had the same trouble when she curtsied to society.

Lesson in Patience, McKechnie Sees Prophecy Fulfilled

THIS IS THE ANNIVERSARY of Bill McKechnie's gloomiest moment as manager of the Bee-Braves. It is May 18, only two weeks from the 1935 afternoon when Babe Ruth leaped overboard in the late afterglow of his glory and swam ashore from the Boston club to life as a gentleman golfer.

Austen Lake

Just one year ago the Braves were rolling rapidly to ruin and Bill was in the insane spot of bossing his vice-president and governing the famed and wealthy man who was signed to inherit his job in another nine months. The club was in the first stage of bankruptcy. The players were surly and bewildered. It was a period of dejection when Bill nibbled dyspepsia pills and pondered on what moment the front office might transfer his command to portly Babe.

In the yellowing files of this column I find the prediction printed, this day last year: "As my shotgun guess, Ruth will never succeed McKechnie or survive this season, if for no other reason that Bill possesses the patience which Babe, as a petulant, impulsive type, lacks. Babe might have managed the Yankees in 1936 if he had not rashly demanded a showdown from Colonel Ruppert on Joe McCarthy. Great competitor in matters of muscle, the Babe is a busher in questions of self-control. As sure as the morning milk on your doorstep, Babe will create an incident some time between now and summer which will place the tiny, terminal dot after his career in Boston."

He did. History shows that on June 2 he summoned the New York and Boston press and phoned him [illegible]

A year has rolled by. The orphaned [illegible] and Bob Quinn in their foster daddy, Mrs. [illegible], and his talent for getting the most out of men, has resurrected a dead team and fanned them into fighting life. Like Phoenix from the ashes of Braves' ruins his ability and character has survived, where men of lesser qualities would have been charred [illegible].

He is a good manager, and a better man.

NO PLACE LIKE HOME

MAJOR LEAGUE MANAGERS dread the homesick player. A temperish, eccentric athlete can be thrashed or wheedled into good sense. A timid one can be fed on vanity. But the homesick youth, once the nostalgic bug bites him, is a total, irreparable loss.

Thus with Wayne Osborne, the California kid pitcher whom the Bees shipped home the other day. Suffering the morbid sulks and falling off in his work, he got his release and went to the Bees' office for transportation.

"Here's your train ticket and Pullman berth," said Bob Quinn, handing over a green, accordion-pleated strip of paper.

"Not by train," said Wayne, horrified. "It takes five days. Please by airplane. I can make it in 48 hours."

He went by airplane.

BIRTH POINT OF GOSSIP

RUMORS, LIKE GRASS FIRES, are started by a thoughtless spark. Thus Saturday's false report that the Red Sox had bought "Buck" Newsom, Washington's star pitcher, began as an office gag in a Boston paper. A mischievous news artist, bored by momentary inaction, invented the trade for sudden excitement. In mock confidence he whispered it to the paper's gullible baseball photographer. The camera man tipped off the baseball radio announcer at Bees field, who put it on the air as a breathless scoop.

Hence, a few hours later, annoyed baseball writers for the four Sunday papers sat down and typed out official denials. I give you my word!

ADDLEPATE'S COMEBACK

IRREPRESSIBLE [illegible] addlepated Max Baer has bobbed up again. This time as business partner of the much married Peggy Hopkins Joyce. Not as a potential helpmeet to the lady. But as a rollicking teammate to the song-moaning mamma and swizzle-stick-waving leader of a Hot-cha orchestra. For one week's booking all Maxie and Peggy ask is a beggarly $4000. At that price they offer a cheap chance for the PWA to support indigent artists.

YANKEE GENEROSITY

AS THE MAN GENERALLY CREDITED with building the Yankee Stadium as baseball's greatest attraction during his personal boom, it has often been suggested that Colonel Ruppert chip the letters off the facade of his park and name it after Babe Ruth.

Instead, this spring in the opening game, Yankees vs. Red Sox, Babe applied for four box tickets, and was informed that the tickets would not be delivered until his check for $8.80 had been forwarded by messenger. Though he has a personal pass, it costs him $1.10 every time Babe or a member of his family wishes to sit in a box seat. Such is fame and the generosity of a ball firm toward an old hero who poured many millions into its treasury.

POT AND KETTLE

LIKE THE EARLY FRONTIER FEUDS between sheep and cow men, no group of sportsmen detest each other with greater conviction than the horse and greyhound people. Lately the horse tracks are talking of installing receiving barns, as a direct copy of the dog [illegible]'s "Janny pit," where Dobbins are locked up two hours before post time to prevent last-minute dosing with freaky chemicals.

Wasnjah suggestion of the dogmen is four receiving barns, one for the horse, one for jockeys, one for owners and the fourth for trainers, with individual sound-proof cells. Fie for the mutt-men!

LITTLE PATTY GIANT KILLER IN BRITISH OPEN

CAUTION is the keynote of Patty Berg's putting, as she lines up a long shot. Little Patty is aggressive, too, as she proved this morning when she drubbed Marjorie Barron of England, 6 and 5, to enter the British Women's golf semi-finals at Southport, Eng.

Mrs. Vare, who was among the favorites, was defeated by another American, Charlotte Glutting, South Orange, N. J., 5 and 3. After being two down at the turn, Mrs. Vare blew up on the last nine while Miss Glutting, driving far and well, never gave her a chance to get even.

The defeat of Miss Morgan was not as much [illegible] was beaten by [illegible] Newell the youthful [illegible] amateur who won the medal in the qualifying round. The score in this match was 3 and 1, and it was featured by Miss Morgan's great comeback on the last nine after being four down at the turn.

TENNIS PROS GET High Praise From QUEEN HELEN

By HELEN WILLS MOODY

Professional tennis has taken on an entirely new aspect. Its present-day manifestation is one of the distinctly new notes in the game. Formerly it used to be that professional tennis players were teachers only. Now it means other things than that. It means that professional players are entertainers as well.

They band together and go on tours which take them all over the United States and to foreign countries. There can be no question but that these tours have promoted a growth in the interest in tennis—not perhaps so much in New York, or San Francisco, or in the cities where the leading players are seen in action in tournaments, but decidedly in parts of the country where it has not been possible to see good tennis and where the person who has seen champions in action is the exception rather than the rule.

NEW NAMES NECESSARY

It is not known whether future tours on the part of professionals will be successful—because there is an insurmountable obstacle presented on the part of the public who pay their money to be entertained. In a sport, such as tennis, they want new names, something different, faces they have not seen before. However, even if there is not another tour, the influence that former tours exerted in exciting interest in tennis remains as a clearly defined benefit to the game.

So these modern professionals have been teachers, without realizing it, thereby proving that the fundamental purpose of a professional in tennis is that of teaching the game. This is the only right in which it can be justified, because of the fact that in teaching there is attained a beneficial and logical end which is of distinct value to everyone concerned.

From time to time, however, a new name will come up, and another tour will be planned.

I cannot understand why some people condemn professionalism in tennis.

However, the practice of recruiting professional talent from the amateur ranks does entail a considerable loss to the amateur tournaments and makes it difficult for the United States to put its best tennis talent into the Davis Cup play against other countries. It is a serious problem to the United States Lawn Tennis Association.

It must be said that professionalism in tennis offers a legitimate field of work for young men who often have given the most valuable years of their lives to tournament and Davis Cup play (not without an enormous amount of pleasure, it must be added, for themselves), and who, during that time were unable to prepare for earning a living in the business or professional world.

Many followers of tennis have been urging that an open tennis championship be adopted, similar to the open championship in golf, and it might prove very interesting—especially to onlookers who want to see all the talent there is in tennis gathered together in one tournament.

The working out of such a plan takes time, but it is practically an assured thing for the future. It will be a direct outcome of the influence of professional tennis and should not harm tennis as a game in any way.

FIRST TOURNEY HERE

It is safe to predict that the first open tennis championship will be held in the United States because in England the traditions of the game are more deeply entrenched, and the tennis authorities less likely to permit change.

Our own tennis association is probably the best of its kind in the world. It has been intelligent in the past, and quick to adopt the changes which have come upon the game, which have been imposed by the quite different conditions in this country.

The association has given opportunities for participation in championship meetings at Forest Hills and in foreign countries to young players who could not have developed their games otherwise.

Every great name in American tennis, from the first down to the last, owes a debt of gratitude to the United States Lawn Tennis Association, and it is not likely that at this time, one of its most difficult, it will be abandoned by its friends.

(Another article on instructive tennis by Helen Wills Moody tomorrow.)

In the second game, the Bees had a two run lead going into the 9th inning but blew it and finally lost in the 10th.

It's possible [illegible] likely that, the Bees will be possession of fourth place when [illegible] Tuesday. Until they lapped over the Phillies in the final game in the Cubs were getting kicked around like so many stray dogs, going down to defeat in seven consecutive games.

CornellBreaksRecord

Cornell, beaten previously by Navy, staged an even more sensational comeback on Lake Carnegie at Princeton, not only whipping the Tulsa and Yale boatings, but eclipsing the course record Navy had set the week before.

The big Red varsity still has one more short distance test before settling down to prepare for the four-mile grind. The Ithacans encounter Syracuse and Harvard in their annual spring day regatta on Lake Cayuga next Saturday, but are not expected to find much trouble. Harvard has had only one race, taking a thorough trouncing from Navy and Princeton a week ago.

In addition to the Ithaca regatta, three of the "younger" rowing collegers, Rutgers, Manhattan and Marietta of Ohio, are slated to race at Philadelphia this week along with Penn's third varsity. The regatta, staged on the Schuylkill because of flood damage at Marietta, where the Mid-America regatta was staged last year, finds the Dad Vail cup at stake.

ANN MARSTERS' BEST BETS FOR TODAY

They say all handicappers have their bad days. So here's hoping our luck has changed and that we will grace the winner's circle once more.

It's get-away week at Narragansett and then the trek will head for Rockingham, New Hampshire's picturesque race track. I'm betting $5 to win on LADY DAY in the first at Walter O'Hara's strip. We understand this juvenile has a world of speed.

ANN MARSTERS' BETS

$5 win LADY DAY, Narragansett 1st

$5 win CACHALOT, Belmont 7th

BANKROLL IS NOW $447.40. DAY'S PLAY $10.

CACHALOT as he appears in the seventh at Belmont Park looms as a safe wagering proposition. It's $5 to win.

The bankroll is now $447.40 as we go into the fortieth day of the novel betting experiment. Here's hoping for winners.

(At the suggestion of Walter O'Hara, Miss Marsters has set out to determine that conservative bets can result in satisfactory profits, or at worst small losses. Walter O'Hara, Narragansett Park owner, provided the capital with a $1000 bill. Total wins turned over to Boston Evening American Christmas Fund immediately. The remainder will be similarly handled at the end of the experiment. This is the fortieth day.)

AT CHURCHILL

Over at Churchill Downs, where things are putting on an "extra" day for "sweet charity," we wheel out a real goodie, that is extra well recommended. I refer to Harper, prepared by that master horseman, Jo Stout. It's a cinch, no less the "cat's pay" is the limit."

Starry Flag has only to repeat that last effort to trim the hashhounds — by open daylight — she meets in the third. Nice sort of hids and these people are a heap sight better than green hands. The sleeper in the race is Indian Love, which has shown some real keen work.

$50,000 Kitty For New Bees | Holy Cross Seems Collegiate Best

By JACK CONWAY

Speaking of news . . . Money for ball players. Bob Quinn has $50,000 to spend for new stars. More cash than the Bees have had available for new players in several years.

Quinn has been trying to purchase a hard hitting outfielder and another infielder.

Bob is also seeking a first class pitcher. The fans are talking about the Bees and believe that with a few more pitchers and a little more strength they may be able to make off the second division habit.

Mr. Boston

The Yankees were more than generous to the Red Sox when they turned over $25,000 and Joe Glenn to Boston. Glenn has been worth this purchase price to the home club.

The Bees got $6000 from Syracuse for Bobby Brown of Holy Cross would indicate the minors are once more in the money. It was an outright sale, and in the event Brown should stage a comeback Syracuse will be able to get at least $10,000 for him.

WILSON AGAIN

FOLDA ENTERTAINS—Glenn Wilson, the Boston baseball player, after a year's absence from the game, has returned to Kentucky to help a new club, located on the Ohio River. Wilson, who played for Louisville in the American Association, is shown with Mrs. Wilson and their baby daughter, Folda Ann. That was the name of the boat in which Mr. and Mrs. Wilson made their honeymoon trip.

"N. E. A."

When a man's batting average is .400 or better at the end of a season, we're inclined to call him a great ball player. But Lou Gehrig is batting around .500 at the present writing and we're not ready to call him anything more than a good ball player. Of course Lou is a great ball player, but we're not ready to call him the greatest we've ever seen. When it comes to batting, Ted Williams is the greatest we've ever seen.

Class and confidence is the word to describe Lou Gehrig. He's the same Lou Gehrig we've known for the past 13 years. He's the same modest, unassuming fellow he was when he broke into baseball as a kid with the Yankees. He's the same Lou Gehrig who has been a credit to baseball and to sport in general.

Holy Cross should win the college baseball championship of the east. Jack Barry's team defeated Harvard easily by a score of 13 to 4. Holy Cross over the years has had exceptionally good baseball teams.

This Stevie Adams who is pitching for the Yankees is a good pitcher for the Yankees. He's a good pitcher for any club in baseball. He's a good pitcher for the Yankees. He's a good pitcher for the Yankees. He's a good pitcher for the Yankees.

SUFFOLK DOWNS

ALLAN WILSON writes to the newspapers, tells of the horses, their owners and trainers, and the appearance of the horses. The horses are a good lot. The horses are a good lot. The horses are a good lot.

"Horsemen like long race meetings," said Allan. "They give them an opportunity to pick spots for their horses. They also save in shipping expenses. All of the better racing stables will be represented at Suffolk Downs."

Agawam is still going through the process of reorganization.

Dan Carroll and Phil Pierce are spending the week end at Dave Breen's camp at Wolfboro, N. H.

George Hirst called my attention to the fine condition of the grass and turf at Northern League Park. The grass both infield and outfield is a treat to baseball players, which have hit the ground.

The Navy organization gave a good account of themselves in their victory over the University of Pennsylvania, Harvard and Tech on the Charles. They had power and precision in their work. Rowing, at one time one of the most popular forms of college athletics, is regaining some of its former standing.

In recent years the Harvard Yale crew at New London has been more of a social event as far as the spectators have been concerned than anything else. Perhaps this year the contestants will show interest in the race itself.

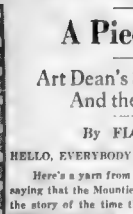
Art Dean's Story of the Indian And the Windowpane

By FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO, EVERYBODY:

Here's a yarn from a Canadian Mountie, and it's an old saying that the Mounties always get their man. But this is the story of the time the Mountie's man almost got HIM.



FLOYD GIBBONS

Arthur Dean of 9 Mill street, Beverly, is today's Distinguished Adventurer and yarn spinner. Art has been a Mountie, and he's been a Constable in the Nova Scotia Provincial Police. This adventure happened to him while he was with the Nova Scotia outfit stationed at Bridgetown.

Maybe you've played cowboy and Indian games when you were a kid. Maybe you've read some of those blood and thunder Western thrillers. Well, sir, this is a modern Indian story.

It happened in 1926. But the Indian and just as fu[illegible] of firewater as any Red Indian you ever read about in Deadwood Dick.

It was about six p. m. on a cold evening in the middle of November. Art was sitting around in the Detachment Office when a phone call came in, and someone at the other end of the wire said in an excited voice that an Indian was on a rampage at his home two miles away. Art and Corporal Smith got into their car and started out.

They got to the Indian's home and went inside. Heap Big Chief Rain-in-the-Milk was on a rampage all right. He'd forgotten all the civilization he ever knew and had gone back to the ways of his ancestors. HE HAD BUILT A FIRE IN THE MIDDLE OF THE KITCHEN FLOOR AND WAS TRYING TO HEAT A KETTLE FULL OF WATER OVER IT.

Art and Corporal Smith stood there for a minute taking stock of the situation. There were two or three bottles lying around the kitchen, and all of them were empty. Heap Big Chief Rain-in-the-Milk was fighting drunk, and that looked very bad, for he was a blacksmith in his soberer and more civilized moments, weighed 200 pounds and measured more than six feet of solid bone and muscle. It was a job where you could either be killed, or get into a lot of trouble, so Art and the corporal used [illegible] enough to stop a war.

They got the Indian out of the house and Art took him to the car while Corporal Smith put out the fire in the kitchen. Art put the Indian in the back seat and sat down beside him. Corporal Smith, when he came out, got into the driver's seat and started back to Detachment Headquarters.

"The Indian was seated on my right," says Art. "I didn't think we'd have any more trouble with him, so I hadn't put on handcuffs. My stick was in the pocket of my breeches and hard to reach because the jacket I was wearing reached almost to my knees."

Art was practically defenceless. He wasn't even watching the Indian. But the car had only gone a short distance when, suddenly, the Indian swung his fist and broke the rear window of the car. THEN, QUICK AS A CAT, HE YANKED OUT A HUGE TRIANGLE OF BROKEN GLASS AND TURNED ON ART.

It happened so swiftly that Art had no time to reach for his stick. As the Indian turned, he grabbed Art by the throat, and in a calm, even, almost pleasant tone of voice he said: "Now I'm going to cut your head off."

The worst of it was that Art knew he meant to do just what he said. The Indian was crazy drunk. He weighed 200 pounds to Art's 138. He was strong as a bull, and with that great piece of sharp-edged glass for a weapon he could cut Art's throat without any trouble at all.

For a few seconds, Art just sat looking at him. But in those few seconds at least a million cold chills had time to gallop up and down his spine. There wasn't a thing he could do to stop this drink-crazed madman. More than anything else in the world he wanted to reach for his stick. BUT HE KNEW THAT THE MINUTE HE DID THE INDIAN WOULD SWING THAT HUNK OF GLASS AND IT WOULD BE ALL OVER.

Up in the front seat, Corporal Smith was driving on, unaware of the tense scene going on behind him. Art tried to get his attention by kicking on the back of the seat. But the Corporal paid no attention. If he heard or felt those kicks, he must have thought they were just another rattle in the old car.

The Indian was eyeing Art like a cat watches a mouse - waiting for Art to make the first move before he pounced. Art gave up trying to signal his driver and cast about for some other escape from the jam he was in. If he couldn't fight his way out of it, he decided, he'd have to try and TALK his way out.

And Art talked for his life. Slowly, he put his arm around the Indian's shoulder and started telling him what a good fellow he was. The Indian listened, and gradually the arm that held that deadly triangle of glass began to fall. It dropped lower and lower, and Art watched it with narrowed eyes. When it was almost down to his lap, Art acted.

WITH A SUDDEN LUNGE HE STRUCK AT THE INDIAN'S WRIST. THE GLASS WENT FLYING FROM HIS HAND AND LOOPED OUT OF THE CAR WINDOW. THE INDIAN SLUMPED DOWN IN THE CORNER OF THE CAR AND WAS QUIET.

When they got that Indian to court the next day he said he didn't remember a thing of what had happened the night before.

"But as for me," says Art, "I'll never forget it—that rough hand gripping my throat and that piece of glass poised ready to cut it to ribbons."

HANEY REVIEWS THE WEEK

Stock Market Sound

DESPITE THURSDAY FLURRY

And Values Move Up

By LEWIS HANEY
(Professor of Economics, New York University)

New York, May 18—The Stock Market last week gave a fairly good account of itself. The averages closed between one and one-half and three points higher on the week. Bonds also firmed up.

With the exception of Thursday's spurt, however, the market was extremely dull and inactive. In fact, the indications given by volume of trading were inconclusive, and not subject to very favorable interpretation. Thursday's activity may have been mostly short covering.

Furthermore, the stocks which were most active did no better than average.

Still, it can be said that nine of the dozen most active stocks showed gains. 'Distiller Seagram led the liquor stocks with a gain of 3 3-8.

Columbia Gas and Electric and Commonwealth and Southern led a little rise in utilities. A gain of two points in U. S. Steel marked some recovery in its group. Allied Stores, Anaconda and Radio showed miscellaneous participation.

For the rise, the mixed situation in motors was illustrated by losses in General Motors and Hupp Motors, while Chrysler was unchanged and Packard gained.

* * *

While admitting the existence of much uncertainty and the possibility of harmful political developments, here and abroad, I am inclined to the following opinions:

1 A definite bottom to the recent reaction was made two weeks ago.

* * *

(3) After a secondary reaction, the market has now reached the first natural upper resistance level. This is the level at which it was supported in April 23-25, and from which it broke sharply in the selling wave of April 27.

(4) There has been much short covering. At the same time some tired or frightened holders are "lightening positions." We are also in the pre-convention phase of important political campaign, with candidates and platforms in doubt. Therefore, a dull period within a rather narrow "trading range" is the logical conclusion.

* * *

(5) No serious reaction seems called for or probable. The Farley-Roosevelt forces are clearly concerned about the possibility that the numerous opponents of the "New Deal" may get together, so radical schemes and heavy taxation will be "soft pedaled."

Business is making a good showing, and most earnings are well maintained. Inflationary forces are always underneath.

(6) But the present uncertainty, coupled with the fact that the public has been burned or scared or is locked in with all it can carry, seems likely to prevent any early resumption of the sustained rise.

About 50 per cent of the reaction has been retraced, and experience shows that usually a rest is then required in order to establish a base for an ensuing rise. It should also be noted that some business difficulties will have to be dealt with, such as over production of oil, competition in motors, and backward construction.

* * *

(7) There seems to be a good chance that the averages will hold at the lows of last week. If they should not, the low of late April would probably be approached.

One should closely watch the volume of trading. If dullness persists on reactions, it will be favorable. This will also be true if the most active stocks are the ones which show gains. (Of course, the reverse of these symptoms would be unfavorable.) If business news continue favorable, no important setback in the market will be likely.

* * *

All in all, I am inclined to expect an eventual resumption of the bull market trend. During this period of dullness, and especially on weak spots, my guess is that purchases of carefully selected stocks which show good earnings may well be made.

One might favor mail order, electrical equipment, paint and varnish, dairy produce, and tobacco issues, and perhaps selected railway equipment, cement and operating utility company stocks.

TRADE Expansion URGED

WORLD-WIDE PROGRAM

New York, May 18 (AP) — Worldwide expansion of trade between countries was urged today by Henry F. Grady, chief of the State Department's trade agreements division, as an escape from production curtailment which he said inevitably would lead to "regimentation."

Sound principles dictate the making of every effort to expand markets rather than to restrict production, he said, in an address to the National Foreign Trade Council.

"Markets can not be adequately expanded through the rehabilitation of our international trade," Grady said. "In turn, the rehabilitation of our foreign trade means a volume of production and wealth creation far in excess of that possible under any other system of national economy."

Asserting this program was being pressed energetically by the government in the interest of business, agriculture and labor, he hailed the support it had received from the 14 other governments which have signed reciprocal trade agreements with the United States.

* * *

Blaming much of the world's present economic ills on increased tariff barriers and restrictions clogging the channels of international commerce, the speaker added:

"This economic distress has given rise to acute social and governmental problems. Distressed groups in every country seek palliatives in the form of subsidies or increased protection from foreign competition. When these demands are heeded foreign trade is further curtailed, and one of the primary causes of the original distress is aggravated.

"The further a country goes in the direction of economic self-containment the farther it must go in the direction of state socialism. It is no mere coincidence that countries in which foreign trade is closely controlled or monopolized, there is a corresponding close control or monopolization of domestic production and trade.

"These are some of the disastrous consequences of the destruction of foreign trade by excessive tariffs and other import restrictions."

SILVER Stocks Ratio LOWER

TREASURY REVEALS

By Associated Press

Washington, May 18—Treasury calculations today disclosed that instead of making progress during the last few months, this country had lost ground in fulfilling the provision of the silver purchase act.

The law decreed the United States should buy silver until its stocks equalled one-third of the value of gold stocks or until the price of the metal reached $1.29 an ounce.

Today's Treasury calculations disclosed the stocks of the white metal on May 14 were only 20.7 per cent of gold, whereas mid-January calculations showed the ratio to be between 22 and 23 per cent.

As accurately as can be estimated, present stocks of silver amount to $2,139,826,010 as of the close of business on May 14. Officials said this figure was arrived at by assuming the $314,903,200 of silver bullion, cost value, carried on the Treasury's daily balance sheet, was purchased at an average price of 60 cents an ounce.

By this assumption, it would have a total value of $637,166,379 when written up to the statutory price of $1.29 an ounce.

Gold Stocks

Gold stocks on May 14 amounted to $10,323,458,779, indicating a necessary silver base of $3,441,000,000 under provisions of the silver act. Thus $1,302,000,000 more of silver is needed, or 1,009,300,000 more ounces at $1.29 an ounce.

The latest official announcement by the Treasury disclosed a total of 834,112,000 ounces of silver had been purchased in fulfillment of the purchase law. This was on last January 17, when stocks of gold in this country amounted to $8,504,900,511. Since that time gold stocks have risen $169,000,000.

Present silver stocks consist of the following: $1,194,953,644 of silver assets, consisting of silver and silver dollars; $6,605,077 of subsidiary silver coin; $38,146,421 of standard silver dollars outside the Treasury, $32,000,000 of subsidiary silver outside the Treasury; $361,200 of silver bullion calculated at its recoinage value and $307,140,379 of silver bullion in the Treasury.

Wall St. Hears

New York, May 18 (INS)—That first-half profits of Container Corp. (CNR) should be between 65 and 70 cents a share.

That Pillsbury (PSY) earnings in the fiscal year ending May 31 may fall below the $2.80 netted the year before.

That larger dividend disbursements by Beech-Nut Packing (BNU) are looked for over the month term.

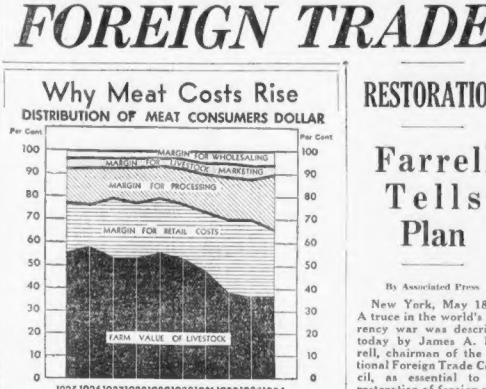
Why Meat Costs Rise

DISTRIBUTION OF MEAT CONSUMERS DOLLAR



For every dollar's worth of meat purchased by the ultimate consumer in 1926, 58 cents went to the farmer. It cost 4 cents for marketing the livestock and another 16 cents for processing or preparing the meat.

Wholesale distribution cost 4 cents and retail costs amounted to 18 cents.

The chart shows the percentage distribution of the retail meat dollar during the period 1925-1934. The farmer's share of the meat dollar dropped from the high of 58 cents in 1926 to 36 cents in 1931.

At the same time retail costs were mounting from 18 cents in 1926 to 30 cents of each dollar in 1934. The margin for processing took a jump in 1934, due to processing taxes, which amounted to over 8 cents per dollar.

Wall Street Sidelights

New York, May 18—State banks and trust companies in New York State are required under an amendment to the Banking Act passed just before the Legislature adjourned Wednesday night, to create a surplus fund equal to 65 per cent of capital instead of 20 per cent as heretofore.

The amendment provides that where surplus is less than the required 65 per cent, 10 per cent of net earnings at each dividend period shall be credited to surplus fund until that fund attains its desired position.

Under the Federal Banking Act, national banks must transfer 10 per cent of earnings at each dividend period to surplus until surplus equals 100 per cent of capital. The law in this State also gives the State Banking Board discretionary power to require the transfer of 10 per cent of net earnings to the surplus fund when capital, surplus and undivided profits number 6o, or equal 60 per cent of net deposit liabilities.

Colgate-Palmolive Decline Puzzling

Colgate-Palmolive-Peet common has been making new lows for the year almost daily the past week, with the Street obviously puzzled for an explanation. The stock has lost about 20 per cent of its value from the year's high. It pays 50 cents a share annual dividends. Earnings the last two years have shown a wide margin over the dividend requirement. In 1935, net was equal to $1.38 a share for the common, compared with $1.16 a share in 1934. At the end of last year, net working capital was $36,306,689, against $23,964,649, 12 months earlier. Current assets were $42,867,543, against current liabilities of $6,306,854.

Southern Pacific Passenger Gain

Commenting on Southern Pacific Lines 10.92 per cent increase in passenger revenue last year, Hale Holden, chairman, attributes the gain primarily to improvement in business conditions, but also credits the gain to the use of air-conditioned passenger cars and "continuance of the low basis of fares experimentally initiated in 1933." These fares are substantially the same as those which will be placed into effect June 2 on Eastern railroads, by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Commenting further on the passenger revenue gain, Holden says travel factors included the Exposition at San Diego, which attracted tourists, increased movement of Civilian Conservation Corps, and increased volume of "excursion and special party travel". Yet Southern Pacific figures show the 10.92 per cent passenger revenue gain was accomplished with but an increase of 4.06 per cent in revenue passengers carried.

RESTORATION

Farrell Tells Plan

By Associated Press

New York, May 18 — A truce in the world's currency war was described today by James A. Farrell, chairman of the National Foreign Trade Council, as essential to the restoration of foreign markets.

Speaking at a world trade luncheon in observance of foreign trade week, Farrell hailed reciprocal trade treaties as an important step in reviving foreign trade, but said the problem could not be solved as long as there were unstable currencies.

"To reap the full advantages of the agreements already completed," he asserted, "we require stable price levels and some form of gold standard that will put an end to depreciation of currencies. It is the firm belief of competent financial authorities that return to a carefully considered gold standard is the best safeguard against the manipulation of currencies for trade purposes.

"With 11 managed currencies have resulted in relative improvement in some countries, there is no indication that those resorting to this alternative have established a firm hold on future prosperity in world markets."

Bond Market Quiet Affair

New York, May 18 (INS)—The bond market was a dull and quiet affair in forenoon dealings today, with the trend mixed in virtually all sections of the list.

In the industrial department, Columbia Gas & Electric 5s of 1961, International Telephone 4½s of 1939, American Type Founders 6s and Pure Oil 4½s were fractionally improved, while Botany Mills 6½s, American & Foreign Power 5s and Pacific Gas & Electric 4s sustained small losses on the day.

Rail liens turned in a relatively better performance, tending irregularly higher. Margins over the previous close were chalked up by Illinois Central 4s, N. Y. Central 4½s, Nickel Plate 4½s, Chesapeake Corp. 5s, Pennsylvania 4s and Texas & Pacific 5s, the latter spurting 1½ points. Minus signs were shown by Southern Railway 4s and Erie 5s of 1967 and 1975.

Government obligations were generally easier. Home Owners' loan 3s slipped 3-32s of a point, while Treasury 4s of 1944-54 and the 2¼s were off 1-32 and 2-32s, respectively.

VOTERS To Pass on DEFICITS

RAW DEALERS FEEL ALARM

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser
(Copyright, 1936, by Universal Service)

New York, May 18—As the statistics become available, it is evident that the recent speculative setback was synchronized with the gradual rise in economic activity to a new peak for the year.

There is no indication that recovery will not go on, though political experimentation and harassment set obstacles in its path. It is significant, however, that even the New Deal financial advisers are now becoming increasingly cognizant of the danger of uncontrolled inflation through the route of continuous Treasury deficits.

The job before the electorate next November will be to decide whether the spender can be confidently converted into retrenchers, or whether new leaders should be called in to do the mopping up job.

The idea is spreading, though belatedly, that unemployment should not continue indefinitely as a vested right available for political exploitation. With all the billions of spending for relief, it is absurd not to appropriate twenty millions or so for an accurate fact finding survey of the true nature of employment and unemployment in the United States.

Guesses Wild

An Administration which has been a prodigal spender in behalf of relieving unemployment is forced to confess that it has no reliable unemployment figures. In the circumstances, progressive organizations make estimates, which are used to further special interests.

I believe that a true census would show that current estimates of unemployment, like the exaggerative report of Mark Twain's death, are grossly exaggerated.

Even so, it is hardly satisfactory to permit millions to drift along in makeshift jobs. The task for management is the horse trading of men and capital along the most productive lines. In a national society, government and business would move harmoniously along lines designed to promote full employment and rising living standards.

Progress has been currently retarded because superficial politicians have focussed their attention on the blunders and shortcomings of business men rather than on the social function of business.

Further recovery is contingent on promotion of better balance in economics of the principal economic groups. With farmers' income still below parity, any significant curtailment of farm income would be a fundamental deflationary influence. The recent easiness of raw commodity prices, which carried one index down to the lowest level since last summer, merits attention. In spite of temporary fluctuations, farm cash income for the period on which government reports are available can hardly fall a year ago, even without benefits.

* * *

This is National Foreign Trade Week and during this period exports will be extolled beyond their importance to economic well-being. Exports may as well recognize that exports will prove no bonanza. Unless we are to resume international lending on a large scale, our exports must be balanced against our imports, payable in commodities.

Imports Trivial

Trade across frontiers will of course continue, and in selective commodities will probably increase, but there is growing sensitivity against competitive imports which may seriously disturb domestic living standards. At the moment, farmers in the corn and wheat belts are alarmed against the influx of alien farm products.

Foreign trade is important, but it is an incident to domestic trade. Even in the peak years, 1927-29, over 90 per cent of national income came from exports, whereas the important foreign countries ran in from 20 to 65 per cent.

The indication that the Senate would have sufficient independence to rewrite the visionary tax reform bill is available even higher taxes on the well employing and investing classes, even though higher taxes are in the offing.

Realists recognize that prodigal spending inevitably means a rising tax level and they also know that the only alternative lies in restoring the high cost of government, which has become the major extravagance of the American people.

BUYING HOMES

Veterans USE BONUS Money

By Hugh E. Bradshaw

Rutherford E. Smith, president of the Savings Bank Association of Massachusetts, says that large amounts of the bonus will be used to purchase homes.

Other sections of the country also report similar conditions and it may be necessary to adjust upward ideas on the flow of bonus money for this purpose.

Mr. Smith has just returned from the annual convention of the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks of Chicago, where bankers from other parts of the country said they were receiving many inquiries from veterans about mortgage loans. Thus the bonus in many opposed may prove a profitable factor in clearing available property and smooth the way for home building operations so badly needed to sustain revival.

Mr. Smith, Administrative and Research Corporation's Weekly Letter, says he excerpt a forecast of a record recovery year for American railroads. The service believes they will finish 1936 with a profit of over $300 millions, the first rail profit in five years. This will result in operating expense and purchases of new equipment, the Letter adds, has been met by a 10 per cent upturn in traffic. We consider this last most important, as it strikes directly at arguments of those unfriendly toward the group that gross could not be stepped up fast enough to outrun increased expenditures.

* * *

Notebook: Gross revenues of Class 1 railroads for the month of April are estimated at between $310 and $315 millions . . . The Weekly Letter lists as factors in this high total for 1936 to date some that public observers might consider earnings depressants . . . For instance: Modernizing of many systems, and reductions of fares . . . The point and figure charting way Sears Roebuck is standing up in great shape . . . And they think the stock should be bought . . . S. Rubber is one of the most talked of stocks on the board . . . The preferred in particular is sought by bull traders.

Another Monday, another Supreme Court day. And this writer wants to admit quite frankly that he is not going way out on a limb just for the sake of saying something that the market will react all the court may make known its decision on the Guffey Act just as the first financial editor of the press. We honestly think that the decision is so important to the market that as it goes so will prices. Should the government win it will open the way for all sorts of complicated regulation schemes. And the market, will foreshadow the disappointment and fears of all business.

This and That: However, if we eliminate the Guffey Act problem altogether it is impossible to get by the fact market observers are in disagreement . . . Some see the trend reversing to the downside after the rally of last week . . . Others say nothing of the sort is likely . . . That it is better than usual summer trade indications and the lack of conformity to past secondary reactions in the price movement since April . . . We somewhat timidly suggest more recovery, especially by industrials, is suggested by technical indications . . . Then the longer trend may be surveyed anew.

STOCKS Turn MIXED DULL TRADING PREVAILS

NEW YORK MARKET

QUOTATIONS TO 2:30

New York, May 18—A two-minded stock market today pushed up a few utilities and specialties while withdrawing support from a number of the recent leaders.

Traders appeared to be in a waiting mood, the majority doing little or nothing. Restricted activity was the rule during the greater part of the session.

On the higher shelves for fractions to a point or more, near the start of the fourth hour, were Consolidated Edison, American Power & Light, Electric Power & Light, United Corp, American Water Works, Columbian Carbon, National Lead (new), N. Y. Central, Delaware & Hudson, Sears Roebuck, Goodyear and Montgomery Ward.

U. S. Industrial Alcohol was a soft spot with a loss of 2 points. Lesser declines were registered by Allied Chemical, Coca-Cola, Westinghouse, Hiram Walker, Western Union and General Motors.

Bonds and commodities were moderately mixed. Foreign good currencies were lower in terms of the dollar.

DuPont declared a 75-cent extra dividend, but the stock was listless.

The last previous cash extra was 25 cents, called in September.

The action of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals in finding the $4,880,000,000 relief bond issue unconstitutional failed to move the market either way.

Current Factors

The magazine Steel provided some interesting news in its prediction that a high rate of steel production probably will be maintained throughout the summer.

It was also pointed out that heavier commitments for structural shapes, steel pipe, sheet and iron plate, together with increased pig iron shipments, were imparting a more than seasonal buoyancy to mill activities.

The report also said that, while the preponderance of opinion was that there would be no general price advance for the third quarter, some of the steel makers considered a boost more than a remote possibility.

It was not overlooked, though, that automobile production has been running statistically by that time weeks, after nine weeks of continuous advance. A further decline in steel scrap prices was seen as puzzling in the light of the impressive showing of steel mill operations.

The French franc, at the beginning of foreign exchange transactions, was off 60% of a cent at 6.50 cents, and sterling was ⅝ of a cent firmer at $4.96⅝.

Comments of Brokers

During the past two trading sessions the market has been digesting the sharp advance that occurred last Thursday, and a resumption of the minor uptrend is still in view.—R. S. Feigus, Prentice, Bloomer & Brady.

For Monday's session we would expect a rather quiet market until the Supreme Court convenes, when we think the court render a decision on the Guffey Coal Act, it is only logical to expect one of the so-called "conventional" markets, in response to the nature of the decision.—Hornblower & Weeks.

A survey of opinions made last week found optimism as to the business outlook but uncertainty as to the near-term prospects for stocks.—C. M. P. Murphy & Co.

Immediate outlook for stocks is obscured by cominguncies in a possible Supreme Court decision today on the so-called "Guffey Act."—H. D. Comer—Paine, Webber & Co.

The withdrawal of leadership points to a continued trading affair for the immediate future but does not change the long pull trend. —J. P. Maher—Shields & Co.

Pope Pius' Brave Words

POPE PIUS XI, speaking not only as head of a great church but, as he described himself, "AS A MAN OF TODAY," struck boldly and without mincing words at "THE GREAT TERROR WHICH THREATENS ALL THE WORLD."

This terror is COMMUNISM.

So great is this menace to the sanity of mankind that the Holy Father was moved to issue two warnings within forty-eight hours—one to an Hungarian pilgrimage and another at the opening of the Catholic Press Exhibition at the Vatican.

To the Hungarian pilgrims, His Holiness had this to say:

"COMMUNISM EVERYWHERE TRIES TO PENETRATE, AND UNFORTUNATELY HAS PENETRATED, TO SO MANY SECTIONS—SOME WITH VIOLENCE, SOME WITH AMBUSH AND SOME WITH TRICKERY, EVEN IN THE GUISE OF THE BEST COUNSELS."

To the guests at the Press Exhibition, he had this to say:

"COMMUNISM IS THE DESTROYER OF INDIVIDUAL DIGNITY, THE SANCTITY OF THE FAMILY, CIVIL ORDER, SECURITY, AND, ABOVE ALL, OF RELIGION."

THESE WARNINGS coming as they do right after the denunciation by Mgr. Lavelle of the Reds should bring home to laymen of ALL RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS in America the importance of MILITANT ACTION against the ONE UNIVERSAL FORCE in the world today that is at work to destroy every vestige of POLITICAL, CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY—earned after thousands of years of bloodshed and strife.

The Holy Father is fully alive to the menace of Communism to the religious instincts of mankind.

We would do well here in America to take his words to heart—AND ACT!

Revenge in Politics

THERE is always something new under the sun of the New Deal. Now it is an example of "government by personal peeve."

Representative Berlin, a Pennsylvania Democrat who, by his own account, has always "gone down the line for the Administration," was defeated for renomination in his recent state primary by a Works Progress Administration official.

Mr. Berlin took his revenge where he found it. A petition to take the pending Frazier-Lemke Farm Bill out of the hands of the Rules Committee where it had been long buried needed one signature to be effective. Mr. Berlin signed it.

Mr. Berlin had signed the petition once before, presumably because he favored the bill. Administration pressure was brought upon him to withdraw his name, which he did. But Administration gratitude did not go down the line with him at the polls. So, back on the petition went his name.

A congressman who makes up his mind three times on a single issue, at least two times for reasons unrelated to his best judgment of the issue, is not serving the American people. By his own admission, he served the interest of political expediency in one instance, and the interest of personal revenge in another.

The wage of a congressman is ten thousand dollars a year. He ought to earn it by serving the people who pay it.

This Gun Killed!

(Picture from International News Photograph Service)

This revolver killed a ten-year-old North Woburn boy. Chief Harry Ainsworth of Wilmington police examines it.

We found the gun in a dump. We went into the woods to play. We didn't think it would go off. It did. Charlie was shot.

Brief as that was the explanation of the dead boy's chums. Longer, unfortunately, will be their grief. Still longer that of the bereaved parents.

Loaded guns do not belong in children's hands. AND IT SHOULD BE THE PURPOSE OF EVERYONE TO SEE THAT THEY DO NOT GET THERE, FOR DEATHS OR SERIOUS INJURIES ARE ALMOST SURE TO RESULT.

This gun's victim is dead. Laws holding owners responsible for the use of their weapons cannot help him. But they CAN and WILL other boys who may also find guns and wish they hadn't.

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

She's in the "pretty forties" Having a tough time. And giving her family a tougher one.

Trouble is, she can't forget the day when she was a "village belle" and "wowed the boys." Every time she looks at her wrinkling skin, fading hair, doubling chin and tripling waist, she goes into a fresh fit of melancholy, for she remembers the peach bloom complexion she had at 18—the gazelle shape she sported at 20.

What a beauty she was then, and how they "fell" for her! There was that handsome fellow from Chicago—and that dashing chap from Kansas City—

DEAR DEAD DAYS

The more she thinks, the worse she feels—and the emptier life seems. For now that youth's glamour has gone, what—oh, what!—does life hold for an erstwhile "village belle"?

Looking back at the dear dead days . . . thinking of the shape and skin you used to have . . . the conquests you used to make . . . believe it or not, that's still the favorite indoor sport of women over 40.

And when they're not doing that, they're taking it out on friend husband. Suspecting him of raising the ructions they can no longer raise themselves. Going through his pockets after he's asleep, looking for the "low down."

If there's any country on earth that should be free of "pretty fortiga," it's the U. S. A. For the fretfulness of the forties, and most of their physical ailments, arise from two simple causes—loss of romance . . . lack of other interests.

Romance to most women is what a job is to men. It is their source of pride and power—their BIG REASON for existence. When was perfectly reasonable in old Turkey, where women rated as cattle, were sold on the slave block and lost their values when their profiles slipped.

It's as silly for a woman more than 40 to mourn for her lost youth and vanished conquests as it would be for a man to cry for his Ford car and lollipops.

THE BEST MEDICINE

There is no American female, however poor, uneducated or obscure, who cannot develop some interest outside her home and the male sex . . . or who cannot hold her place in life as firmly and proudly in her forties as she did in her twenties.

Men—I admit, girls—are a "great treat" before 20. And diverting amusement until you're 100. But if you can't find anything else to think about after 40 but the boys of yesterday," you have the intelligence of a guinea pig and the ambition of a turnip. And deserve all the beating you get!

Here's a country that offers you every opportunity the female heart can desire or use. And what do most of you do? You sit down and have a good hard cry because you can't stay 16 forever!

What a lotta good it did YOU to be born free, equal and a human being!

Mr. Jefferson Repudiates Mr. Roosevelt

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

To Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt,
President of the United States,
The Executive Mansion,
Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. President:

ALTHOUGH you made two speeches in honor of my one hundred and ninety-third birthday—one in Baltimore on April 13 and one in New York City on April 25—I am at a loss, after reading both speeches, to know whether you had not confused MY birthday with the birthday of His Late Majesty George the Third, or the birthday of King Louis the Fourteenth.

For although you spoke on both occasions at what purported to be "Jefferson Birthday" celebrations, I heard you mention my name ONLY ONCE, and that was to give to the public my age at the outbreak of the American Revolution—something that could very easily be found in any encyclopedia.

* * *

NOW, my dear Mr. President, did you directly REPUDIATE me or was it an honest and commendable SENSE OF SHAME that caused you to ignore me as completely as if I had never existed, as if I were not the Founder of that Democratic Party of which you profess to be the leader but whose present activities, under your leadership, I can now hardly distinguish from the old English Tory Party in our pre-Revolutionary Colonies?

Indeed, Mr. President, I must lay the omission of any reference to me or my well-known principles by yourself in both your speeches to a decent sense of shame, for I nowhere note in your utterances A SINGLE PRINCIPLE THAT I CAN SUBSCRIBE TO.

Nor in the actual performances of yourself and your alleged Democratic Party in the last three years can I find the remotest trace of kinship between you and me.

* * *

YOU have both by speech and act flouted the rights of the States, while I, the man whose birthday you and your followers professed to "celebrate," am FOR PRESERVING TO THE STATES THE POWERS NOT YIELDED TO THEM BY THE UNION.

You, who use my name and natal day on which to make political speeches, have used your office to coerce Congress into enacting your pet legislative schemes, while I BELIEVE THAT THE MORAL EFFECT OF COERCION IS TO MAKE ONE-HALF THE WORLD FOOLS AND THE OTHER HALF HYPOCRITES, TO SUPPORT ROGUERY AND ERROR ALL OVER THE EARTH.

You, Mr. President, are teaching, in the manner of the old tyrannies of Europe, that the best government is bureaucratic, while I believe that THE HAPPIEST PEOPLE ARE THE LEAST GOVERNED.

* * *

THOMAS JEFFERSON
Writing the Declaration of Independence

I HAVE stood aghast at the squandering of public funds during your Administration, at the frightful waste, at the growth of the colossal public debt, the foreboding deficits and the increase in taxes, while I reiterated over and over again that I AM FOR A GOVERNMENT FRUGAL AND SIMPLE, APPLYING ALL THE POSSIBLE SAVINGS OF THE PUBLIC REVENUE TO THE DISCHARGE OF THE NATIONAL DEBT, AND, FURTHER, NOT FOR A MULTIPLICATION OF OFFICERS AND SALARIES MERELY TO MAKE PARTISANS.

There are, in fact, my dear Mr. Roosevelt, so many fundamental principles, CONSTITUTIONAL AND OTHERWISE, on which we differ fundamentally that I can quite understand why you felt that delicate apprehension and almost exquisite reluctance about mentioning my name at dinners which, were, I believe, dedicated to me, but which, as far as the contents of your speeches go, might have been dedicated to some of those European enemies of democracy which your friends have lately taken up—Marx and Lenin, I believe, are their names.

* * *

IN VIEW of these facts, my dear Mr. President, I suggest that you and your misnamed Democratic Party choose some other person's birthday (might I suggest Lenin's or Stalin's?) each year in order to air principles that are utterly repugnant to me—principles to which I gave all the best years of my life TO DESTROY in order to help found a new kind of INDIVIDUALISM under the sun, which I regret to say, you and your followers are doing your best to ANNIHILATE.

Sincerely yours,
SPIRIT OF THOMAS JEFFERSON.

The Colby Speech

Human Side of the News

By Edwin C. Hill

THE GLOBE TROTTER OF HEARST METROTONE NEWS

Edwin C. Hill

Bainbridge Colby, who was Secretary of State under Woodrow Wilson, is a forthright gentleman who talks straight from the shoulder.

He is a Democrat of the Jefferson and Cleveland school, one who believes that a true republican system is one which leaves the individual to his own devices, and which leaves to the individual States the larger measure of power.

I was particularly impressed by a speech he made recently in New Jersey, in which he said:

"American business men are men of integrity. Their word is good. Their methods are honorable. Their business practices are patterns throughout the world, and yet the government which they sustain, which relies upon their strength because it has no other reliance, gouges them, taxes them stupidly and outrageously, constantly rears unnecessary barriers to the growth and progress of business, and abuses all engaged in it."

A newspaperman has more intuition than a woman. He senses trends and events, and while he goes wrong not infrequently in predicting the outcome of horse races and prize fights, he usually knows better than anyone else how the public is thinking and which way it is going to turn.

A NEW PSYCHOLOGY

Two years ago it was almost a crime to wear a top hat and tails in this land of the free and home of the brave. But last season alone more top hats and tails were sold in the United States than in any other year in the country's history. Irving Berlin and Fred Astaire were not solely responsible for this, either. They played their part, of course, but a changed psychology had much more to do with it.

The American people have come out of their sleep—out of the trance of the depression and post-depression. The jaundice is vanishing out of the system, and some clear thinking is in order from now on. Things popular yesterday will not be as popular tomorrow. Most of us can recall the year 1919, the year of the Peace Treaty and the formation of the League of Nations.

I don't think that a million votes could have been obtained against the League of Nations in face of the emotional surge for peace which followed immediately upon the war. We would have been swept into the League just as we have been swept into one hundred other experiments if it had not been for the fact that we had one good, solid reason to think it over.

In that year the sentiment of the country was reversed, and the United States decided against the League of Nations by an overwhelming vote. In like manner, it was popular to kick business around in 1934 and 1935, but it is not so popular today. I have been reading that out of a possible 31,000,000 employables business men of the country are employing 25,000,000.

FAIR AND HONEST

Well, my judgment of the American people is that they want to be fair and honest and that they have a pretty fine sense of loyalty. After a time they were bound to sit up and take notice that a lot of jobholders, living on the government, were going about calling their employes "crooks," "blood suckers" and worse.

After a while they were bound to sit up and take notice that some members of Congress, absolutely ignorant of business and coming from States where the total population does not equal the number of workers and their dependents in one large business house, were trying to run or ruin the business on which their livelihood and security depended.

I have an idea that time has arrived. These 28,000,000 workers know better than a politician from Podunk as to who keep them at work and who is keeping them at work while, at the same time, giving them every advantage to further themselves by the use of their talents.

They know what kind of jobs have been created by a social service worker who was made a businessman overnight and given $4,000,000,000 of the public money to spend. They know it is true, as Alfred P. Sloan has said, that government creates nothing. It only spends what workers create.

When they read that the du Pont Company in Delaware, employing 36,000 workers they may get a little indignant at the same social service worker who says he has to spend prodigiously because industry is not employing people.

And they'll agree with Mr. Colby that "business does not want a breathing spell. It wants its legitimate opportunity and rights." For business means the 28,000,000 as well as their employers.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McIntyre

O. O. McIntyre

New York, May 18—Diary: Up and a note from Monta Bell filming in India. And out walking a way with Ted Wood at 4 exchanging jape and quiddity. Then by the Ritz Carlton to see John Ringling, of the circuses and in the foyer I bespoke myself to a lady I did not know, thinking she was Ina Claire.

So to the Colony for a late breakfast with my lady and was holden twice to eggs Florentine. Afterward snopping and to call on Estelle and Gelett Burgess but they were out, and we by tram to Lucy Virginia Long's at Greenwich, as restful a country estate as ever I lazed about.

Home in the moonlight having missed Kay Brush's dinner bid and also seeing her guests, Irma and Rube Goldberg and the Arthur William Browns. Worked furiously until late and then reading the English edition of Dalton Trumbo's "Eclipse," which he is gracious enough to say I inspired.

An increasing number of stage and screen folk are nibbling ends of pens and gazing reflectively out windows in the tantalizing throes of literary creation. Peggy Wood recently enlarged her writing horizon with another full length novel of back stage doings. She has in the past written a novel, several short stories, essays and a preface to a modern edition of her father, Eugene Wood's "Back Home."

Broadway went for pixilation in a big way. It was soon being lyricized on the air and in cabarets. Gary Cooper brought it out of the moth balls in a recent film. It's an old New England expression derived from the English word pixie—meaning elves, and often resurrected in a whimsy by Alexander Woollcott.

I talked to a kindly gentleman today who was in a state of utter dejection. In his morning mail he received a most unjust, sarcastic letter from one of his intimate friends—a friend since preparatory school days. It was filled with invective over a situation for which he was blamed and with which he had nothing to do.

He was a flop-eared longhorn who came out of a revolving door of the Roosevelt, pell mail, as though expecting a kick from behind. "Can't expect a fellow to get the hang of them in two days!" he grinned to the starter.

Isn't It So?

About all that a woman gets out of giving a man a piece of her mind is the vocal exercise.
